WOMEN OF BRITAIN DEMAND BAN OF WAR.

NOTED AUTHOR DESCRIBES WHAT MOTHERS EXPECT FROM GOVERNMENT.

By Hall Caine.

[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—On Monday afternoon, December 9, for the first time in the history of Britain, a British Prime Minister stood before an audience of women only, not as their master, but as their servant, to tell them what he proposed to do for them and to ask for their support.

It was courageous of Lloyd George, too, to meet that audience of women, but they had a right to command him.

Having suffered terribly, they had a right to say, "You of all British statesmen have been most responsible for the conduct of this war, and we cheerfully admit that you have contributed largely towards bringing it to a righteous and triumphant ending. But now what about the future? We have paid a bitter price for victory. Is the world going to be a better place for it?"

It was a thrilling moment when the Prime Minister of England had to answer that question to his audience of women. They knew nothing and cared nothing about parchment and parties. They did not understand the present political crisis wherein everybody seemed to be quarrelling, and yet everybody was professing the same creed.

The Prime Minister could make no amends to those sufferers. But one thing he could and without doing it everything else he might have done would have been useless. He could tell his audience of British women, and through them the women of the empire and of the world, that as woman is the greatest sufferer by war, the last and greatest martyr, his government, if returned to power by the general election, would call for such conditions of peace that wars must cease, that this war must be the last war, that the criminals who made it must come up for judgment and their guilty instruments must stand for punishment, and that never again must a sword be drawn or a shell fired except when in the calm, unhastened judgment of the nations of the world acting together. It is war to prevent war, as a policeman's truncheon is to preserve peace.

After receiving this assurance, the newly-emancipated women of Britain were able to listen to schemes of social amelioration and national reconstruction, for none has a

WILSON'S VISIT UNITES BRITAIN AND AMERICA.

Enthusiasm of London Populace Continues so Long as President Remains in Sight; Immense Crowds Gather Wherever Executive Appears; No Jarring Note Disturbs Entertainment.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—President Wilson made his last public appearance in London today. Officials of the city of London presented him an address of welcome in the ancient Guildhall where other famous Americans, including Gen. Grant and former President Roosevelt, have been received. Afterward he was the guest at a luncheon in the Egyptian Hall of Mansion House, where hover the ghosts of decades of civic oratory, and where many Americans have partaken of the famed aldermanic turtle soup.

The drive from Buckingham Palace and return was witnessed by immense crowds. There was plenty of enthusiasm abroad but it hardly reached the same volume as that which attended the President's entry into London on Thursday. Announcement of the results of the general election was somewhat of a counter attraction today.

Beneath the surface of the formalities at the Mansion House, an unusual episode of human interest was rippling—part happy, part tragic. Premier Lloyd George, who sat near the President, was learning that the voters had renewed his lease of power by heavier majorities than political auguries had foretold. H. H. Asquith, his one-time chief and rival of today, was seated near by and heard that his political career of more than thirty years had been halted.

The day's official events were not limited to the two functions in the city. The President received and spoke to various delegations which presented addresses at the American Embassy and tonight he dined at the Premier's residence in Downing street with the members of the Cabinet.

After the dinner he entrained for Carlisle, where tomorrow he will visit his mother's birthplace. On Monday he will be in Manchester, the great Midland commercial city. The President will make an oration in the free trade hall at Manchester, which holds 4000 persons, and another speech at a luncheon where other delegations will be presented.

The visit to London has passed without any jarring note or discussion of precedents and rank like that which attended President Grant's visit in 1877.

RED CROSS ORDERS KNITTERS TO QUIT.

MORE THAN TEN MILLION ARTICLES MADE; NO MORE NEEDED FOR ARMY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—America's army of women knitters, who did not cease work with the signing of the armistice, today were ordered by the Red Cross to "stack needles," their task accomplished.

An inventory of articles in reserve shows sufficient on hand to meet the needs of fighting men in this country and abroad and of Red Cross relief commissions. Knitted articles now in the making will be finished and turned into the 854 Red Cross chapters in this country, which will issue no more yarn.

More than 10,000,000 sweaters, socks, mufflers, helmets and wristlets were turned out in the seventeen months preceding the overthrow of the Central Powers.

Virtually every man in the army was given woolen accessories fashioned by the tireless fingers of thousands of women who chose that method of aiding to win the war.

MISSOURI GUARDSMEN PATROL KANSAS CITY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) Dec. 28.—Four hundred members of the Seventh Regiment, National Guard of Missouri, called out today by Gov. Gardner at the request of Mayor Cowgill, because he feared a repetition of disturbances in connection with the strike of local street car men, patrolled the streets in automobiles all afternoon today and early this evening the cars went, unmolested, to the barns.

Judge Announces He will Jail All Husbands of the Kind He Can.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—"Slacker marriages," performed by thousands in the early days of the selective service law, are "beginning to bear fruit in the form of deserted wives and children," according to Judge William F. Gemmill of the Court of Domestic Relations.

The judge, disgusted by the many tales of woe related by war brides who have haled slacker husbands into court, announced today that he would see that as many as possible of the culprits are sent to jail.

SEE NEW MEXICAN REVOLT

Rich Exiles Ready to Back Rebels in the Overthrow of Carranza.

BY W. D. HORNADAY.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MONTEREY (Mex.) Dec. 28.—If the many reports of revolutionary uprisings and plans for disturbances of this kind that have reached here recently are true, the government of President Venustiano Carranza is again facing a critical situation. There is no means of knowing how much reliance there is to be placed in these various reports. It is evident, however, that conditions are not as bad as the enemies of the existing government would have the people believe.

However, it is unquestionably true that several political factions in and out of Mexico who want to see the rule of Carranza overthrown believe that now is an opportune time to bring that thing about and they are unusually active along those lines.

It is a notorious fact that the owners of millions of dollars of property in Mexico are now under the ban of exile. This list of wealthy men who, in the time of Diaz, made up largely the real ruling class of the country numbers several hundred and includes such families as the Terrazas, the Maderos, the Pimentels, the Trevinos, the Limantours and a host of others.

RICH EXILES WOULD RETURN.

The opinion prevails among the business and financial element of Mexico that peace can never come to this country until its wealthy citizens who are now living in enforced exile are permitted to return to their homes and take up their industrial activities which are so necessary to the country's further progress and development. Naturally these men who are living in enforced expatriation are leaving no stone unturned to get back to their homes. If they have to go to the extreme of promoting a revolution to accomplish their purpose they are willing to do so, it is explained.

Carranza's treatment of foreign investments has won for his government no friends or supporters among the people of the countries whose good will and active co-operation would prove of such help and value.

It is asserted by men who are in close touch with political conditions in various parts of Mexico that the government has fallen down in the fulfillment of its earlier promises to the masses of the people. Originally Carranza was an adherent to the more or less socialistic views and platform of the late Francisco I. Madero, Jr., but he has departed far from these tenets, and has so far put into effect no provision either in the new constitution or statutory law that would bring material benefit to the more than 12,000,000 natives who comprise the laboring element of the country.

VILLA-ZAPATA ACTIONS.

COBLENZ, Friday, Dec. 27.—Sixty airplanes of the Fokker type arrived in Coblenz today by special train from Berlin. They were the first of 200 airplanes which are to be turned over to the American forces in Coblenz in accordance with the armistice.

Each machine occupied a flat car and a German soldier guarded each car. A number of German aviators also arrived to try out one out of each twenty machines before the planes are turned over to the American commission. The planes for the test will be selected by the Americans and the Germans will make the flights to show that the machines are in good condition. The flights will take place near Coblenz in the presence of American officers.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—M. Claveille, the Minister of Public Works, announced in the Chamber of Deputies today that France would receive 70,000 cars and 2600 locomotives of the rolling stock which Germany must hand over to the Allies. Germany already has delivered 3800 cars and 200 locomotives.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—(Havas.) A German wireless dispatch carries a report that Marshal Foch has authorized elections for the National Assembly to be held in the occupied regions of the Rhineland.

The Echo de Paris says this statement is at east premature, as Marshal Foch has not yet raised the question with the Entente governments.

GENEVA (Switzerland) Dec. 28.—(Havas.) The British troops have made many arrests at Cologne because the population did not obey orders to be in their homes at 9 p.m., according to reports received here. Fines had proved ineffective.

NEARLY ALL FRENCH PRISONERS RELEASED.

ALREADY 320,000 REPATRIATED FROM GERMANY, SAYS PARIS REPORT.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—(Havas.)—Already 320,000 French prisoners have been repatriated from Germany, according to announcement made by Louis DesChamps, undersecretary for demobilization, in the Chamber of Deputies today. It is expected that all prisoners will be repatriated within a month.

With respect to the possibility of using ports on the Rhine for revictualing the liberated regions and the armies, Foreign Minister Pichon declared that general headquarters had appointed a committee to formulate a plan of procedure.

IN PITIABLE CONDITION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Official advices to the State Department today say the first contingent of Russian prisoners of war reaching Omsk and Chilabinsk on their way from Germany and Austria are in a pitiable condition because of lack of clothing and shoes. Forty thousand, according to estimates, are endeavoring to return to Siberia, and of these 15,000 have insufficient clothing. Seven thousand are reported in Samara without shoes.

The American Red Cross at Chilabinsk, though handicapped by lack of material, is rendering all the assistance possible. The Russian Red Cross is said to be unable to give any aid.

The prisoners relate stories of extreme hardships and privations. They were obliged to walk sixty miles in three days and on arrival in Russia received no food or attention from the Bolshevik authorities. The latter, the report says, are seeking to induce the former prisoners to join the Red army, but the prisoners are reported strongly resentful against the Reds and horrified at atrocities they have witnessed.

FRENCH LINER DOCKS WITH CHRISTMAS MAIL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—The French liner Niagara arrived here today from Bordeaux with 277 passengers and 6000 bags of Christmas mail. Only one enlisted man, a sick corporal, was aboard.

Among the passengers were Col. Webb C. Hayes, son of the late President Rutherford B. Hayes, who has been attached to the army service corps in France, and Capt. Algernon Sartoris of Washington, a grandson of Gen. Grant, who served in the French aerial armament division.

COMPARE MRS. WILSON TO GRACIOUS QUEEN.

LONDON FINDS PRESIDENT'S WIFE "MOST DELIGHTFUL AND CHARMING."

[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The Chronicle's woman representative, describing Mrs. Wilson's visit to the American Women's Club, says:

Mrs. Wilson came to London Thursday as a simple woman of simple ancestry, but as the wife of a great man. The people of London were eager to greet her and they cheered her because of her husband. After the first day Mrs. Wilson was cheered everywhere because of her gracious self. No queen could have had a more queenly manner, no great lady could be more gracious, no woman more utterly winning than President Wilson's wife. I had a talk with Miss Benham.

"She's a perfectly lovely woman," Miss Benham exclaimed. "I do not mean only loveliness of face, but loveliness of character."

A little later when I was presented to Mrs. Wilson at the American Women's Club, I was conscious instantly of her appealing charm. As she shook hands with me I realised the difference in her manner from that of the ordinary society woman. There was a firmness and strength in her grasp, her smile was intensely individual and altogether spontaneous, and her voice rich and sweet with enough suspicion of American accent to give it a distinctive touch, but no suggestion of nasal twang. Miss Benham told me Mrs. Wilson knows London very well and was extremely happy to be here again. She has enjoyed every moment of her visit.

She was surprised to find a gathering of men and women outside the American Women's Club and her face lit up with pleasure as she alighted with Mrs. Butler Wright, wife of the American counselor at the embassy, to take tea with the club members. It was simply a tea party with no speeches and no ceremony. It was such an 'at home' indeed as Mrs. Wilson might visit any day among her friends in Washington and she liked the ease with which she was able to chat to her countrywomen in London.

"I cheered you from St. James street," Mrs. Montague Porch (Lady Randolph Churchill) said to Mrs. Wilson. "I do hope you liked it all."

"It was lovely," Mrs. Wilson responded eagerly.

Then came nurses and war workers, for whom Mrs. Wilson had a kindly word, and then more titled women, and so it went on till almost everyone in the club had had the honor of presentation. Viscountess Harcourt, Lady Paget, Lady Herbert, Lady Ward, Lady Henry, Lady Baron, Mrs. Walter Burns, Mrs. John Astor, Cora Countess of Stafford and Mrs. Henry Thornton were some of the women who met the President's wife, but it was a democratic tea party and the women who earn their living were there equally with the rich and the aristocratic.

Mrs. Wilson had heard about the club and she made the round of it with interest. The visit of the President's wife was like the passing of a gracious queen in the medieval romance. Women who held her hand for the fraction of a second will account it an honor all their lives. Those who saw her in the street outside will remember her grace and her dignity. I think most of us forgot that Mrs. Wilson was the President's wife. Afterwards we agreed Mr. Wilson's part in settling the world's affairs must be influenced by the comradeship of his wife, but at the moment we were only conscious that an American woman had become a living symbol of an American ideal. Mrs. Wilson herself is the most picturesque expression of her husband's ideal; that it is character which counts and that beside it rank and riches and power are little things.

GERMAN POWER DOUBTFUL.

[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The Chronicle says it is expected the Allied conference in Paris which is preparatory to the peace congress will open January 13 and probably last until the end of February so there is not much prospect of the peace congress assembling before the beginning of March.

News to hand from Berlin during the past few days is very disquieting and the Chronicle learns the formation of a government representative of the whole of the late German Empire having sufficient authority and strength to conclude a permanent treaty of peace with the Allied powers seems to become more remote every day.

The decision as to the names of the British representatives to the Allied conference and peace congress have not yet been arrived at. That awaits the decision of today's counting of votes, at any rate as to the representative chosen to speak for British labor. It has been agreed that not more than five representatives shall be present from each country.

HARDEN FEARS SITUATION.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—(Havas.) Maximilian Harden, the German editor, in an interview, has declared to the correspondent of the Temps that Germany was beaten by the superior strategy of the French generals. Marshal Foch, he declared, was a military leader far above Ludendorff, who never has been victorious on the front. As for Von Hindenburg, the editor characterized him as little more than a figurehead.

Harden expressed fear that the loss of Alsace-Lorraine would be for Germany a wound like that suffered by France, but he hoped the borders would have no great importance in the future.

He declared the former Emperor not directly responsible, but a great culprit for he should have been able to avoid the catastrophe, but lacked courage to say "no" at the last moment.

Harden believed the present German situation very serious. In his opinion an industrial crisis was imminent, the revolution becoming more and more the agitation of delirium. He feared extension of the Bolshevist movement in Germany, if that country were obliged to make too great sacrifices. But he was convinced the socialist revolution would have no influence on France, of which the national spirit was not prone to Marxism.

PEACE ENVOYS IN AGREEMENT.

Conference to Convene Between January 9 and 14.

Week's Discussions Bring a Brighter Outlook.

Heads of Various American Interests Meet.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—Sentiment today in peace congress circles after another week of conferences is distinctly brighter and a spirit of optimism has replaced the pessimism which had prevailed in some quarters. This is due to private advices from London showing the political exchanges now going on there have been equally as satisfactory as the public demonstrations.

One of the primary questions considered in these exchanges has been the convening of the conference as early as possible. The American delegation has been quite insistent that it shall begin not later than next January 9.

Exchanges today indicated agreement for its assembly between next January 9 and 14.

Even the latter date would be acceptable to the Americans, it is announced, as assuring a reasonably early opening of the discussions.

PESSIMISM RELIEVED.

Pessimism previously existing in some quarters was due to the various views held on the "fourteen points," but the President's statement that the Allied leaders agree with him in the principles therein laid down largely has removed the first impressions.

The President's statement is echoed in all responsible quarters here, Premier Clemenceau joining in the declaration that the conferences he has had show an entire agreement on the principles.

A meeting was held in Col. House's residence tonight of all the American interests, including food, shipping, army, navy, treasury and War Board. Thus far, Herbert C. Hoover, Edward N. Hurley and the other heads of the various branches have proceeded independently, but tonight's meeting foreshadows a united commission.

DELEGATES AGREED.

One of the most prominent delegates to the Peace Conference in Paris said that recent exchanges had resulted in an agreement on the principles of virtually all questions, including freedom of the seas.

Premier Clemenceau, it is reported, has informed his intimate friends that his three conferences with President Wilson and Col. House have resulted in a complete understanding.

President Wilson's trip to Belgium, to include a visit to Brussels, as the guest of King Albert, will probably be deferred to the end of January, it developed today.

MOTHER'S BIRTHPLACE TO WELCOME WILSON.

PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO CARLISLE TO BE INFORMAL AND PERSONAL.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

CARLISLE (Eng.) Dec. 28.—This bustling railway center, where in olden times Briton and Scot often battled for supremacy, was busy today preparing to welcome President Wilson when he comes tomorrow to visit the girlhood home of his mother. Here and there the Stars and Stripes hang lazily in the smoke-laden atmosphere and an occasional merchant is decorating his shop windows with tricolor ribbons.

Decoration, however, is not general, for official word has gone out that the President desires his visit to be purely personal and informal. The authorities are working along this line but the people are making their own preparations and the police force has been augmented in expectation of a large crowd tomorrow.

The President will arrive at the Citadel railway station, where he will be met by Mayor Carr and other officials. The President will be escorted past the old Roman wall to the Crown and Mitre, a famous old coaching hotel, where he will be presented the freedom of the city and will sign the city roll, which contains many famous names. A silver casket containing an engrossed address of welcome will be sent to Washington later.

Leaving the hotel, the President will go to Annetwell street, where stood the church of which his grandfather was pastor and where his mother was born and lived three years. The President also will visit the house in Cavendish place which his father built and will be shown the room which his mother occupied. The house has been unoccupied for some time.

BRITAIN AND AMERICA AGREED, SAY LEADERS.

PRESIDENT BRINGS UNDERSTANDING, LLOYD GEORGE TELLS CORRESPONDENTS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Premier Lloyd George, receiving American newspaper correspondents at his residence at 7 o'clock tonight, said the conferences with the President had brought about an agreement on general principles. The Premier said he felt assured that matters which had been agreed upon by America and England would prove of the greatest assistance in the work of the peace congress.

An understanding virtually had been reached between the Entente Powers regarding the admission of the various nations to the Peace Conference itself, said the Premier. In his conferences in Paris with the premiers of France and Italy, President Wilson had become fully acquainted with their views, and he now also had acquired a knowledge of the British standpoint, the Premier said.

"And," he continued, "I feel assured that all these premiers are in accord on the basic principles of the peace which will come before the conference. At any rate, it will be certain that America and England will be found working in complete harmony in the conference."

At the close of his address, answering a question as to when he expected the British delegation to go to Paris, the Premier replied that it could not be before the end of the first week of the new year.

The newspaper men were received after a long conference the Premier and Secretary Balfour had with President Wilson this afternoon and which will be continued at the Premier's dinner to the President at his official residence in Downing street. Details of the general plans discussed this afternoon will be discussed further at the dinner.

In an informal talk, the Prime Minister welcomed the American newspaper men to England. He expressed gratification that he had been able to meet them and spoke unrestrainedly of the important role newspaper men had played in promotion of the ends that all had at heart in furthering the intimate friendship between the United States and Great Britain.

The Premier said that, owing to the election, it had not been possible to organize the British delegation to the peace congress, but he would proceed immediately, now the result was known, to take up the matter. At present, he added, it could be stated that only two members of the delegation had been selected definitely—meaning himself and Foreign Secretary Balfour.

Touching on reports from the United States that Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, would be one of the delegates, the Premier pointed out it was impossible, as the Chancellor was the government leader in the House of Commons and would be needed at home.

only one will be entitled to sit in the House of Commons, namely, a Sinn Feiner, Countess Markiewicz, who was elected for St. Patrick's division of Dublin city. But as the Sinn Feiners refuse to sit at Westminster, the Commons will, as hitherto, be composed entirely of males.

All the other women candidates, including many of the foremost in the women's movements, were rejected by their constituencies. Christabel Pankhurst came the nearest of these to being elected, being defeated only by a narrow majority by a Laborite.

SINN FEINERS WIN.

The Sinn Feiners, as expected, not only swept Ireland, but gained their seats with enormous majorities, leaving the Nationalist representation in the new Parliament a bare seven members. John Dillon, the Nationalist leader, was defeated by E. De Valera, Sinn Feiner for East Mayo, by a majority of over 4000. Joseph Devlin, however, defeated De Valera for the West Belfast seat. De Valera also was a candidate in the South Down constituency.

A prominent feature of the polling revealed by the count is the comparative smallness of the polls compared with the registered number of electors. No figures are available yet as to what extent the army and navy have voted. It should also be noted that the defeat of the Asquithians, especially the former Ministers, in most cases, can be attributed in part to split votes in three-cornered constituencies.

Not only has no coalition Minister been defeated, but most of them were re-elected by extraordinary majorities. For instance, Premier Lloyd George's majority is about 12,000; Winston Churchill's 15,000, and Andrew Bonar Law's 13,000.

Majorities well over 10,000 were quite common among the coalitionists. On the other hand, the pacifists almost in every case were defeated ignominiously by heavy votes. The rejected candidates in this group included Philip Snowden, James Ramsay MacDonald, William C. Anderson (labor member for Attercliffe division of Sheffield,) Arthur Henderson, the labor leader; Robert L. Outhwaite (Liberal for Hanley,) Frederick W. Jowett (labor member for West Bradford,) George Lansbury (former Socialist member for the Bow and Bromley division of Tower Hamlets,) and Charles P. Trevelyan, former Parliamentary Secretary for Education.

ASQUITH DEFEATED.

Among the surprises of the election was the defeat of H. H. Asquith, the former Premier. He is rejected in company with most of his ablest lieutenants, including Sir John Simon, former Home Secretary; Reginald McKenna, former Chancellor of the Exchequer; Walter Runciman, former president of the Board of Trade; Herbert Samuel, former Postmaster-General; Charles F. Masterman, former Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and others.

PRINCESS PAT SEES REGIMENT IN ACTION.

BETROTHED COUSIN OF KING GEORGE HAS NOVEL EXPERIENCE DURING WAR.

Princess Patricia of Connaught, whose betrothal to Commander Alexander Robert Maule Ramsay of the royal navy has been sanctioned by King George of Great Britain, has had the novel experience of seeing on the firing-line the famous Canadian regiment, the "Princess Pats," named after and sponsored by her. She saw the troops in action and declared that she was very proud of them. Her presence at the front was a big event among the soldiers. She is the honorary Colonel-in-Chief of the regiment.

Princess Patricia is a daughter of the Duke of Connaught, former Governor-General of Canada, and a cousin of King George. She is in her early thirties and long has been a favorite in court circles in England and Canada. Known as Princess "Pat" she has been regarded as the most popular of the younger members of the British royalty.

She is described as a handsome young woman with great spirit and a keen sense of humor. Outdoor sports, such as golf and horseback riding, long have been her chief sources of pleasure. Her late uncle, King Edward VII, was said to have been very fond of the Princess.

Several times she has been reported betrothed, but on each occasion denials were forthcoming of the truth of the reports. The King of Spain, Lord Anglesey, the Count of Turin and Grand Duke Michael of Russia, were among those to whom at various times the Princess was said to be engaged.

Alexander Robert Maule Ramsay was born in 1881, the son of the thirteenth Earl of Dalhousie. Commander Ramsay served with the British army in the Dardanelles in 1914 and for valiant work was given the Distinguished Service Order.

WILSON HAPPY AFTER LLOYD GEORGE PARLEY

PREMIER ENTHUSIASTIC OVER ACCORD BETWEEN THE NATIONS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Conferences between President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George and other members of the British Cabinet yesterday were extremely successful, according to the Mail, which says the most cordial harmony of ideals was found to exist, "with the happiest augury for the future relations of the United States and Great Britain."

The Premier rarely has been so enthusiastic over the results of any conferences, the newspaper continues. It states the first session of the Peace Conference at Paris will begin late next week, or on the Monday following.

President Wilson cordially assured all the statesmen of the gratitude of himself and wife over the reception given them. He said they had expected a fine reception, not essentially for themselves, but for all America, but they were not prepared for an ovation of such magnitude.

When Mr. Wilson reached the palace last evening he was in conspicuously good spirits, without the slightest trace of fatigue. Those nearest him who were trained observers of his moods, according to the Mail, are "convinced the President had a fruitful and satisfactory day. They believe it unquestionably laid the foundations for an Anglo-American entente cordiale on all vital subjects."

"The conferences were conducted in that heart-to-heart atmosphere which the President is trying to find in the capitals of Europe as best designed to enable him to give a calm and cogent exposition of his views on cardinal issues," the newspaper says a member of Mr. Wilson's party remarked. "Mr. Wilson encountered a good deal of the White House environment in Downing street and so felt very much at home."

WILSON'S VISIT TO LONDON ENDS

Dinner with Premier Closes Public Functions.

Two Speeches Win High Praise in British Press.

Guildhall Reception is Tribute to Guest as Man.

The President has not heard that the police took away red flags from a few women of foreign appearance in the crowds in the streets of London. The President has gone abroad in London unattended by American secret service men.

TALKS PLEASE BRITONS.

The President's two speeches, that at Guildhall, a formal oration having as its text that the world is eager for a lasting peace of justice and right, and that at the Mansion House, of mellower tone, were not disappointing to Londoners. That is saying much, as the President's prestige as an orator had awakened high expectations.

It was clear that his auditors, embracing the world's officialdom, financial and business, whatever their political mind, were single-minded in their interest in the President's words. The same may be said of the greater audience throughout the country. No public utterances in Great Britain, apart from those of English statesmen which were landmarks in the progress of the war, have commanded such prominence in the newspapers.

The phrase from the President's speech at the state banquet at Buckingham Palace—"There is a great tide running in the hearts of men"—already had gripped the headlines of the papers and pervaded their editorial columns.

HEARTY RECEPTION.

The President's reception at the Guildhall was spontaneous and hearty. When he arose to speak there was a prolonged outburst of hand clapping and cheering and his talk was frequently punctuated by applause. At the conclusion of his address the audience rose and cheered and it kept up the applause and cheering as he passed out.

The President was given a notable ovation on rising to begin his speech and some of the points that won renewed applause were his tribute to the armies of the associated governments and his declaration that people throughout the world wanted peace and wanted it immediately—not, however, by conquest, but by agreement of mind.

The distinguished government and other officials received by the Lord Mayor before the President's arrival included Premier Lloyd George, Field Marshal Haig, Foreign Secretary Balfour, Admiral Sims, former Premier Asquith, Andrew Bonar Law, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the ambassadors of the principal Allied governments.

GROUPED ON DAIS.

After President Wilson's arrival all were grouped on the dais, the Lord Mayor in the center and President Wilson on his right, next to the Duke of Connaught. The royal artillery band in the gallery played American airs, ushering President Wilson in with "The Star Spangled Banner."

In the course of his speech, the President declared the soldiers had fought to do away with the old order and establish a new one. The old order, he said, had for its center the "unstable thing" called the balance of power, determined by competitive interests "jealous watchfulness" and "an antagonism of interests."

The suggestion for a concert of power to replace the balance of power, he remarked, was coming now from every quarter and from every sort of mind. The concert to come, he declared, must not be a balance of power or one powerful group of nations set off against another, but "a single, overwhelming powerful group of nations which shall be the trustees of the peace of the world."

LEADERS AGREED.

The minds of the leaders of the British government, the President said, were moving along the same lines as his own, and their thought had been that the key to peace was the guarantee of it and not the items of it. The items of it, he added, would be worthless unless a concert of power stood back of them.

No such potent union of purpose had ever been seen in the world before, he said, as that which now demanded a concert of power to preserve the world's peace.

There had been just a hint that the President's address would be the key to the conferences he has been holding with British statesmen, and the address as it was delivered today was interpreted in American quarters as confirming the previous intimations that these conferences had been satisfactory from the President's viewpoint.

The President concluded his address amid agreat demonstration, and then proceeded to the luncheon at the mansion house with the Lord Mayor.

The oldest observer in the Guildhall today declared no reception ever accorded any dignitary there approached in spontaneity and volume that which greeted the President's appearance and the address which followed.

The procession from Buckingham Palace to the Guildhall was through a crowd that cheered continuously.

AT MANSION HOUSE.

The programme of the Mansion House luncheon was comparatively informal except for the toasts. When the aged master of ceremonies, in city livery and standing behind the Lord Mayor's Chair, proclaiming "your royal highness (addressing the Duke of Connaught,) my lords, your excellencies, ladies and gentlemen, I pray silence for the President of the United States," there was a burst of hearty, although decorous, enthusiasm with hand clapping, waving of napkins and beating of tables.

The President's speech was in a lighter vein with a personal touch. He described himself not as a cold talking machine, but with something of Scotch caution, tempered by a liking for insurgencies which could have no other than Celtic origin. His explanation of the breaking of precedent in coming to Europe, because he thought consultation was duty above all others, was applauded, as was his quotation from Charles Lamb that one could not hate a man whom he knew. The President spoke without a touch of emotion or hesitation. His only gesture was when he spoke of the shadow of grief which had been lifted from the world.

DRINK WILSON'S HEALTH.

Mrs. Wilson rose with the others when the health of the President was drunk. The orchestra of the Scots Guards in the balcony above the entrance played American airs during the luncheon and the American and British anthems when the toasts to the King and the President were drunk.

The Lord Mayor escorted Mrs. Wilson, while the President was with the wife of the Lord Mayor. The Duke of Connaught and Premier Lloyd George followed. Mrs. Wilson wore a violet gown ornamented with embroidered silk motifs of the same tone and a velvet toque of the same color with wings of violet.

During the luncheon the Lord Mayor proposed the health of the King after grace was said by Prebendary Stone.

The Lord Mayor then proposed the health of the President, paying tribute to him as a man and statesman. He declared that his presence in Europe was the sweeping away of a policy never before departed from on the other side of the Atlantic. He referred to the friendship and sympathy the American people gave to England even before America entered the war.

IN ROBES OF OFFICE.

The Lord Mayor wore his robes of office with gold chain and diamond badge. The gold plate of the city was banked on dark red plaques, making an effective background for the central group at the head of the table.

Field Marshal and Lady Haig and Admiral and Lady Beatty sat across the table from President Wilson. Premier Lloyd George, the Maharajah of Bikaner, American Ambassador Davis and Mrs. Davis and the Archbishop of Canterbury were beyond Mrs. Wilson. Members of the Cabinet and officials of the royal household were arranged on either side of the head of the table, which stretched the length of the hall.

President Wilson divided his conversation with the Premier, Field Marshal Haig and the wife of the Lord Mayor, Lloyd George absorbing the larger share.

Elections returns passed from ear to ear along the tables and kept Premier Lloyd George in an expansive smile as they reached him.

DINES WITH PREMIER.

President Wilson concluded a strenuous day of entertainment with a dinner at the Prime Minister's residence tonight, where were gathered the members of the War Cabinet and other government and Dominion officials.

The dinner was served in the big oak-panelled dining-room in which the President lunched with the Premier yesterday. The table decorations consisted of poinsettias, chrysanthemums, lilies of the valley and sprigs of holly. Two silver candelabras added to the soft lights from a large electrolier suspended over the center of the table. There were small lights on the walls, on which hung paintings, including a portrait of Washington, unveiled by the President yesterday.

The dinner was purely informal. Premier Lloyd George was seated at one end of the table, with President Wilson on his right and Sir Robert L. Borden, Canadian Premier, on his left. At the opposite end of the table sat Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, with William M. Hughes, the Australian Premier, on one side, and Gen. Louis Botha, the South African Premier.

The other guests were Earl Curzon, J. Austen Chamberlain, George N. Barnes, Gen. Smuts, Baron Finlay, Speaker James W. Lawther, A. J. Balfour, Walter Hume Long, Viscount Milner, Baron Montague, Sir Eric Geddes, Winston Spencer Churchill, Lord William Weir, Sir Joseph Maclay, the Earl of Reading, Viscount Grey, Sir Henry Wilson, Admiral Wemyss, Field Marshal Haig, Admiral Sir David Beatty, Gen. Sykes, Sir Maurice Hankey, W. P. Lloyd, Premier of Newfoundland, the Maharajah of Bikaner, Sir George E. Foster, Sir Joseph Cook, J. T. Davies, the Premier's secretary, and Philip Kerr.

According to information reaching the Third Army, the famous big gun is lying in the open air, protected from the eyes of the curious only by a board fence. Other guns of large caliber are also within the yard, a few German soldiers acting as a guard.

WILSON CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY IN LONDON.

GREATEST ANNIVERSARY OF HIS LIFE, PRESIDENT DECLARES.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28. — President Wilson celebrated today his sixty-second birthday by a round of official activities. King George presented him a magnificent set of books and at the same time gave gifts to every member of the President's official party. The women of the party received brooches and the men stick pins, set with diamonds forming the letters "G.R."

The President also received tokens from Mrs. Wilson and his family. He declared he considered it the greatest birthday of his life.

King George called at the President's apartments at 10 o'clock this morning and wished him many happy returns of the day.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28. — President Wilson went to the American Embassy today and received the delegations of a number of societies and leagues, some of which presented memorials and resolutions welcoming him to London. He arrived at the Embassy in one of the semi-state carriages from Buckingham Palace. A crowd had gathered in front of the Embassy while the windows and balconies of the block in which the Embassy stands were all occupied by American naval and military officers and soldiers and sailors.

Among the last of the delegations received was that of the British Labor party, Arthur Henderson and Charles William Bowerman, representing the joint committee of the Labor party executives and the Parliamentary committee of the Trades Union Congress. They presented an address on behalf of the British Labor movement.

President Wilson in accepting the address expressed his doubts as to whether he merited the kind things said about him. He added that he would do all in his power to carry out the ideals set forth in the address.

NATION LEAGUE DELEGATES.

The President also received a delegation from the League of Nations Union. It was headed by Viscount Grey, former Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and it included the archbishop of Canterbury and Viscount Bryce, former British Ambassador to the United States.

The President, in addressing the delegation, said:

"Gentlemen, I am very much complimented that you should come in person to present this address and I have been delighted and stimulated to find the growing and prevailing interest in the subject of the league of nations, not only a growing interest, merely, but a growing purpose, which I am sure will prevail and it is delightful that members of the government which brought this nation into the war because of the moral obligations based upon a treaty should be among those who have brought me this paper, because on the other side of the water we have greatly admired the motives and subscribed to the principles which actuated the government of Great Britain in obeying that moral dictate.

"You have shown what we must organize, namely, that same force and sense of obligation; and unless we organize it the thing that we do now will not stand.

"I feel that so strongly that it is particularly cheering to know just how strong and imperative the idea has become. I thank you very much indeed. It has been a privilege to see you personally.

"I was just saying to Lord Grey that we had indirect knowledge of each other and that I am glad to identify him. I feel as if I had met him long ago and I had the pleasure of matching minds with Mr. Asquith yesterday."

BELIEVES IN RELIGION.

The President later received a large delegation from the national council of the Evangelical Free Churches. In addressing the delegation the President said:

"Gentlemen, I am very much honored and might say touched, by this beautiful address that you have just read, and it is very delightful to feel the comradeship of spirit which is indicated by a gathering like this.

"You are quite right, Sir, in saying that I do recognize the sanction of religion in these times of perplexity with matters so large to settle that no man can feel that his mind can compass them.

"I think one would go crazy if he did not believe in Providence. It would be maze without a clew. Unless there were some supreme evidence we would despair of the results of human counsel.

"So that it is with genuine sympathy that I acknowledge the spirit and thank you for the generosity of your address."

NOTED PERSONS SEEN.

Delegations received by the President included the Archbishop of Canterbury, former Premier Asquith, Lord Shaw, Sir Willoughby Dickinson, Lord Buckmaster and the Bishop of Oxford; representatives of the English-speaking union, of the American University Union in Europe, of the Atlantic Union, of the British American Fellowship Society; Lord Gainford, representing the Friends' League of Nations' Committee; Lord Rothschild, representing the Zionist movement; F. B. Meyer, and representatives of the Trades Union Council and the British Labor party.

The Royal Institute of Public Health has invited the President to accept an honorary fellowship in recognition of his services in promoting measures to improve health.

URGE BELGIAN PRELATE ATTEND PEACE PARLEY

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—The suggestion that Cardinal Mercier, the primate of Belgium, attend the Peace Conference is being discussed among diplomatists here. The Belgian delegates have been named, but it is understood, before their appointment, Cardinal Mercier was favored even outside the Catholic party. Baron van den Heuvel, Belgian Minister to the Vatican, however, finally was selected as the clerical member of the delegation.

Those making the suggestion that Cardinal Mercier attend point out that he has a wide knowledge of Belgium in war time, and that the part he played determines the attitude against the Germans, making him a valuable participant in the conference.

deeper interest in them. To make their homes more fit for human habitation, to protect the health and promote the educa tion of their children, to shield their sons from the temptation of drink, to support and assist their brothers who have been disabled in the defense of human liberty and endow mother hood and shelter the "unwanted child"—all these were aims which came closely home to the heart of every true woman.

But the one thing the soul of woman all over the world desires is the death of war, of the makers of war, the banishment from civilized communities of the scouts and spies for war and the doom and destruction of the blood-sucking leeches of war, for without this everything else must sooner or later be as dust and ashes. "I have not been to the actual battlefield, but I have been with many of the men who have fought the battles and the other day I had the pleasure of being present at a session of the French Academy when they admitted Marshal Joffre to their membership.

QUOTES JOFFRE.

"That sturdy, serene soldier stood and uttered, not the words of triumph, but the simple words of affection for his soldiers and the conviction which he summed up in a sentence which I will not try accurately to quote, but reproduce in its spirit. It was that France must always remember that the small and the weak could never live free in the world unless the strong and the great always put their power and their strength in the service of right.

"That is the afterthought—the thought that something must be done now; not only to make the just settlements—that of course—but to see that the settlements remained and were observed and that honor and justice prevails in the world. And I have conversed with the soldiers I have been more and more aware that they fought for something that not all of them had defined, but which all of them recognized the moment you stated it to them. They fought to do away with an old order and to establish a new one, and the center and characteristic of the old order was that unstable thing which we used to call the 'balance of power,' a thing in which the balance was determined by the sword which was thrown in on the one side or the other, a balance which was determined by the unstable equilibrium of competitive interests, a balance which was maintained by jealous watchfulness and an antagonism of interests which, though it was generally latent, was always deep seated.

FOUGHT BY FREEMEN.

"The men who have fought in this war have been the men from the free nations who are determined that that sort of thing should end now and forever. It is very interesting to me to observe how from every quarter, from every sort of mind, from every concert of counsel, there comes the suggestion that there must now be not a balance of power, not one powerful group of nations set up against another, but a single overwhelming powerful group of nations who shall be the trustees of the peace of the world.

"It has been delightful in my conferences with the leaders of your government to find how our minds moved along exactly the same line and how our thought was always that the key to the peace was the guarantee of the peace, not the items of it; that the items would be worthless unless there stood back of them a permanent concert of power for their maintenance. That is the most reassuring thing that has ever happened in the world.

"When this war began, the thought of a league of nations was indulgently considered as the interesting thought of closeted students. It was thought of as one of those things that it was right to characterize by a name which, as a university man, I have always resented. It was said to be academic, as if that in itself were a condemnation—something that men could think about but never get. Now, we find the practical leading minds of the world determined to get it.

EAGER TO BEGIN.

"No such sudden and potent union of purpose has ever been witnessed in the world before. Do you wonder, therefore, gentlemen, that in common with those who represent you I am eager to get at the business and write the sentences down? And that I am particularly happy that the ground is cleared and the foundations laid, for we have already accepted the same body of principles. Those principles are clearly and definitely enough stated to make their application a matter which should afford no fundamental difficulty.

"And back of us is that imperative yearning of the world to have all disturbing questions quieted, to have all threats against peace silenced, to have just men everywhere come together for a common object. The peoples of the world want peace and they want it now, not merely by conquest of arms, but by agreement of mind.

"It was this incomparably great object that brought me overseas. It has never before been deemed excusable for a President of the United States to leave the territory of the United States, but I know that I have the support of the judgment of my colleagues in the government of the United States in saying that it was my paramount duty to turn away even from the imperative tasks at home to lend such counsel and aid as I could to this great, may I not say, final, enterprise of humanity?"

Whisper of Grief Now Silent as Sun of Hope Spreads Its Rays to Charge Earth with Prospect of Happiness, Says Wilson.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—In his speech this afternoon at the Lord Mayor's luncheon at Mansion House, President Wilson said:

Mr. Lord Mayor, your royal highness, your grace, ladies and gentlemen:

You have again made me feel, sir, the very wonderful and generous welcome of this city, and you have reminded me of what has perhaps become one of the habits of my life.

You have said that I have broken all precedents in coming across the ocean to join in the councils of the Peace Conference; but I think those who have been associated with me in Washington will testify that that is nothing surprising. I said to the members of the press in Washington one evening that one of the things that had interested me most since I lived in Washington was that every time I did anything perfectly natural it was said to be unprecedented.

It was perfectly natural to break this precedent, natural because the demand for intimate conference took precedence over every other duty. And, after all, the breaking of precedents, though this may sound strange doctrine in England, is the most sensible thing to do. The harness of precedent is some times a very sad and harassing tramel.

In this case the breaking of precedent is sensible for a reason that is very prettily illustrated in a remark attributed to Charles Lamb. One evening in a company of his friends they were disbussing a person who was not present, and Lamb said in his hesitating manner: "I h-hate that fellow."

"Why, Charles," one of his friends said, "I did not know that you knew him." "Oh," he said, "I-I-I d-don't. I c-can't h-hate a man I know."

And perhaps that simply attractive remark may furnish a secret for cordial international relationship. When we know one another we cannot hate one another.

I have been very much interested before coming here to see what sort of a person I was expected to be. So far as I can make out, I was expected to be a perfectly bloodless thinking match, whereas I am perfectly aware that I have in me all the insurgent elements of the human race. I am sometimes, by reason of long Scotch tradition, able to keep these instincts in restraint. The stern covenanter tradition that is behind me sends many an echo down the years. It is not only diligently to pursue business but also to seek this sort of comradeship, that I feel it is a privilege to have come across the seas and, in the welcome that you have accorded Mrs. Wilson and me, you have made us feel that companionship was accessible to us in the most delightful and enjoyable form.

I thank you sincerely for this welcome, sir, and am very happy to join in a love feast which is all the more enjoyable because there is behind it a background of tragical suffering. Our spirits are released from the darkness of the clouds that at one time seemed to have settled upon the world in a way that could not be dispersed, the sufferings of your own people, the suffering of the people of France and the infinite suffering of the people of Belgium. The whisper of grief that has been blown all through the world is now silent and the sun of hope seems to spread its rays and to charge the earth with a new prospect of happiness. So, our joy is all the more elevated because we know that our spirits are now lifted out of that valley.

There are 47 officers and 990 men in the Three Hundred and Thirty-eighth Field Artillery on the Pocahontas. The One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Field Artillery on the same ship has a strength of 25 officers and 1076 men, and the One Hundred and Ninth Ammunition Train, Horse Battalion, 3 officers and 484 men.

A unit of 161 men designated as the Camp Funston casual detachment also is aboard the Pocahontas.

It was announced that the recent assignment of the Five Hundredth Aero Squadron to early convoy was through error and had been canceled.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28. — The American transport Turrialba, with ninety-two wounded officers, arrived here today from France. She brought also a returned cargo of explosives.

CONVICT KIDNAPERS CAPTURED AT BORDER.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

DOUGLAS (Ariz.) Dec. 28.—After evading pursuing posses of four counties for more than four days, two escaped convicts from the State penitentiary at Florence were taken into custody here last night by the military authorities in the act of attempting to cross the international line into Mexico in an automobile with another man and two women.

According to the officials, one of the women in the automobile fired at a border guard when he commanded them to halt, but the party was overpowered by a cavalryman, who, single handed, lined up his prisoners to await the coming of assistance.

The captured men are J. C. Wunder, alias Frank Warden, and Emmett McDaniels, escaped convicts, and Pat McDaniels, a brother of the last named. The women in the party are Laura Foreman, aged 17, of Florence, and Grace Barns of Scotsdale, Ariz.

TO DISCUSS CHANGES AFFECTING COUNTIES.

CONFERENCE WILL BE HELD WITH SUPERVISORS ON PROPOSED ALTERATIONS.

Heads of departments and members of the legislative committee recently appointed will confer with the Board of Supervisors on Tuesday morning on the proposed changes in the State law affecting counties. The committee has practically completed its work. If the Supervisors approve the proposed changes, they will be sent to the Los Angeles members of the Legislature.

County Recorder Logan has proposed a change which provides a charge of 10 cents a folio for copying any record or paper on file in the Recorder's office, and 3 cents a folio for comparing copies with originals. It is also proposed to change the system of paying for the feed of prisoners at the County Jail. The rate is now 12 cents a meal for each prisoner. Under the proposed law the county would pay for the provisions instead of allowing the Sheriff a flat sum.

The Assessor suggests a change which provides that mercantile establishments may base their reports on personal property for tax purposes on their inventories of the first of each year. It proposes that the reports of taxpayers shall be made by the first Monday in January instead of on March 1. It is further proposed to reduce the fee for filing subdivision maps from $5 to $1.

A radical change suggested is to start the fiscal year on January 1 instead of on July 1. This involves the adoption of a constitutional amendment. Walter K. Mitchell, County Counsel A. J. Hill, T. W. Robinson and David R. Faries are members of the committee.

HAD LOTS OF OFFICES, BUT LITTLE IN THEM?

HEAD OF COLLECTION AGENCY TO HAVE HEARING ON EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGE.

That C. L. Schroeder, who will be given a hearing before Justice of the Peace Hinshaw on January 6 on a charge of embezzlement, maintained an elaborate system of well-furnished but otherwise empty offices in carrying on a local collection agency will be alleged at the trial by the District Attorney's office.

According to Detective Miklauschultz, Mr. Schroeder, who was manager of the Association of Mercantile Credit Men, kept up six adjoining offices in the American Bank Building and used five names as dummies. Schroeder is charged with appropriating to his own use moneys collected by him for local firms. While the amount specifically charged against him is $480, the total amount is said to have reached much higher figures.

According to information said to have been given the District Attorney's office, Mr. Schroeder employed three girls. It is declared by investigators that when a person would appear to pay a bill he would send one girl to one of the five extra offices for a receipt from another man who he said was handling the case. The receipts, it is asserted, were already written out and signed with various names.

SOLDIERS ACCUSED OF THEFT.

Stealing an automobile at Long Beach in order to get back to Camp Kearny before they were marked up as absent without leave, is said to have led to the arrest at the camp of Jessie Lethey and Frank Resob, soldiers. They were arrested by Detective Powell of the Auto Club of Southern California and were brought north yesterday. They are now in the County Jail on a grand larceny charge.

Get the best—The Times incomparable Midwinter Number will be out January 28th, 1919. Wait for it.

Another is at Brest, and two of the battleships are reported to have left Brest with troops.

The battleships assigned for this service are among the older on the navy list, and in order that they may bring as many soldiers as possible are operating with far less complement than usual.

The following are the battleships and their locations:

Virginia, Rhode Island, Georgia, Louisiana, Kansas and New Hampshire, already in service; Ohio, being fitted out at navy yard, Philadelphia; New Jersey, Nebraska and Connecticut, Hampton Roads; Minnesota and Vermont, navy yard, Philadelphia; Michigan, navy yard, Norfolk; South Carolina, York River, Va.

The cruisers assigned to transport troops are the North Carolina, Montana, Huntington, Pueblo, St. Louis, Rochester and South Dakota, already in service; Seattle, at Brest; Charleston, at Portsmouth; Frederick at navy yard, Norfolk.

Baldness
—is rapidly increasing — says Prof. John H. Austin, Chicago's bacteriologist, hair and scalp specialist of 40 years' practice—and is in many, many cases directly or indirectly caused by Alopecia Pityrodes—
—A very common scalp trouble.
—It starts with a scaling of the scalp, sometimes slight, called "dandruff," sometimes abundant — producing thick, grayish white, dry or greasy scales—which leads to falling of the hair.
—At first, when the hair starts to fall, it is hardly noticeable, but as this ailment, "Alopecia Pityrodes," becomes more deeply seated, and the germs multiply, as they always do, the falling of the hair increases rapidly, and in time the top of the head becomes entirely bald. Both men and women of all ages of life are subject to Alopecia Pityrodes, but particularly those between the ages of 20 and 35 years.
—Prof. Austin, who is now at Hamburger's, says that people who are at all troubled with any kind of hair and scalp trouble, such as —Itching Scalp
—Falling Hair
—Excessively Oily Hair
—Dry and Brittle Hair
—Dandruff
—Split Hair
—Gray or Faded Hair
—Should have their hair examined at once under his powerful microscope.
—Prof. Austin says that the use of mange cures, dandruff cures, hair tonics, vaseline and elixirs is like taking medicine without knowing what you are trying to cure.
—During the past four years Prof. Austin has made thousands of free microscopic examinations of the hair and scalp of Hamburger's patrons—and they enthusiastically appreciate this service.
—Both men and women should take advantage of the FREE MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATIONS by Prof. Austin this week in his private offices on the Second Floor of Hamburger's. Hours: 10 to 12 and 2 to 4 daily.

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

I Will Pay You 6% Interest and Taxes
A Guaranteed Investment—A Profit—A Homesite.

I have lived in Los Angeles 31 years.

I (or my company) have owned 1079 acres (equivalent to 203 city blocks.) I am now sole or principal owner of 624 acres of choice lands within the city limits of one of the finest cities in the world—Los Angeles.

I (or my company) have developed and improved intensively, four large subdivisions in Los Angeles.

We have brought these properties up from alfalfa fields to some of the most desirable residence sections of the city.

Adjoining or in these subdivisions is the most famous high school in southwest America, a branch library with the greatest circulation of any branch in Los Angeles, some of Los Angeles' finest grade schools, hundreds upon hundreds of beautiful homes, 20 miles of streets with sidewalks, parking, trees and complete public utilities.

These subdivisions have been famous for their restrictions and the manner in which they have been kept clean.

All this has been done in thirteen years—since 1905.

When the war came we had a part of the last subdivision left.

Now I am going to sell these attractive homesites and give you the opportunity of your life.

At the beginning of the war we had a regular list price at which these homesites were being sold.

During the war a discount of 20% was allowed from those prices.

Now the price is going back to normal.

But I am going to put it back by stages.

On January 18th, the price will go up so that a $1000 homesite, which you can now buy for $800, will then cost you $850.

On February 22nd, the price will again go up so that a $1000 homesite that you can now buy for $800 will then cost you $900.

The price will continue to rise each month until the normal prewar price is restored.

Now then, here is my proposition: If you buy any one of these homesites now and later decide that you do not want it, you may, at the end of one year from date of purchase, give me 10 days' notice in writing, reconvey the property to me, and I will pay you all that you have invested in the property plus 6% interest per annum on the investment, plus the taxes you have paid—provided the property is in the same shape in which we delivered it to you.

FAIR ENOUGH!

In other words, I guarantee your investment for one year, and give you the opportunity to reap all of the profit from the advance in worth and price.

Think of it! A guaranteed investment, and you holding a deed to a desirable homesite that is advancing in value every day.

You may ask Dun's or Bradstreet's about my financial ability. I am a director in two and a stockholder in four Los Angeles banks.

These homesites are in New Vermont Square, where building has always been very active and is daily becoming more so.

As an investment you can't beat it. As a homesite, we say, see it, and ask the people who live there.

Come to my office any week day at 9:30 a.m. or 2 p.m. and we will show you the property.

If you want to get the most for your money, come before the first advance in price.

WAS LUCKY DAY FOR ME, SHE SAYS

Is Feeling Like a New Person Since Taking Tanlac

Had Suffered Two Years And Was Almost in Despair.

All of Her Troubles Have Disappeared Now.

"By the time my second bottle of Tanlac was gone my troubles were gone, too, and I have been feeling just like a new person ever since," said Mrs. Martha Patterson, at one time a practical nurse, and residing at 401 East 21st street, Los Angeles, recently.

"My stomach had been bothering me for nearly two years," she continued, "and I could hardly eat anything without bloating all up and feeling miserable. My food would sour soon after eating and the gas formed by it would cause headache, shortness of breath and awful depressed feeling about my heart. I was extremely nervous, could not sleep well and just felt badly all the time. For a long time I had been having sharp pains in my back and had become so weak and run down that I was getting discouraged.

"Finally, I concluded to get Tanlac and it was a lucky day for me when I did, for I began to improve almost immediately. My stomach trouble has gone entirely now and since my food digests properly, I am never bothered any more with gas, bloating, irregular heart action or distress of any kind after eating. All my pain and nervousness has disappeared and I sleep splendidly every night. I have gained in weight, strength and energy, and feel decidedly better in every way than I have since my troubles began. Tanlac has certainly been a fine thing for me and I feel that I would be doing anyone, who is suffering as I did, a good turn by getting them to try it."

Tanlac is sold in Los Angeles, Pasadena and San Diego by the Owl Drug Company under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative.—[Advertisement.

RED TROOPS PERIL VILNA.

Poles Establish Lithuanian Front to Oppose Advancing Bolshevist Army.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Vilna, the capital of Lithuania, is threatened by an advance of Bolshevist troops, according to a Warsaw dispatch to the Mail under date of Thursday.

The Polish Chief of Staff has demanded free passage for Polish troop trains over lines now in German hands, from the Polish frontier to Vilna. The Germans are also asked to permit the rejoining of the Polish and Lithuania railroads, cut by the Germans. If the German reply is unfavorable the Poles will begin a march into Lithuania. The Poles have asked the Allies to send officers to accompany the troops.

WARSAW, Thursday, Dec. 26.—The Polish government has established a thin military front against the advancing Bolshevik forces. The line extends from Lapy, in the north, southward to Litry and beyond Lemberg. The Polish troops have occupied the railway stations and the main railway line on the borders of the territories held by them.

Thousands of Russian refugees continue to arrive in Poland. It is reported that the Germans are preparing to hand over Vilna to the Bolsheviki.

The Polish government has received reports that 1000 Poles have been massacred at Pinsk by Bolshevik and Ukranian forces who are advancing toward Brest-Litovsk, which the Germans are preparing to abandon.

The republic of West Ukraine has been formed at Tarnopol, Galicia, under the Presidency of Constantine Levitsky. The new government is favorable to the Entente.

ODESSA, Wednesday, Dec. 18. Since daylight today there has been house-to-house fighting between opposing Russian forces in which a French contingent has taken part.

The French, aided by a volunteer Russian army, had been enabled to extend the French zone on the water front to over one-third of the city, including the business section. Hundreds of the opposing Russians still are hidden in houses from which they keep up a continuous fusillade.

The extent of the casualties or the exact situation throughout the city is uncertain.

Two days ago the republicans announced that they would permit the French to land, but evidently their soldiers got beyond control when the French landed this morning.

The French general Bordus is in command of the city. Gen. Grishin Almazoff is in command of the Russian volunteers assisting the French in exercising the civil functions. The French have no relations with the republican command here nor with the republicans at Kiev, where they have been in control for four days.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—The advice of Gen. Franchet d'Esperey, commander-in-chief of the Allied armies in the Near East, summoned to Paris to confer with the government over the situation along the Black Sea coast and in the Balkans, is expected vitally to affect the policy of the Entente toward Russia.

With Allied forces now in Odessa, Sebastopol and Novorossiiske, attention is being attracted to the activities in the Black Sea region, a Socialist member of the Chamber of Deputies demanding a full statement of the government's Russian policy.

Marcel Cachin, a Socialist Deputy, speaking in the chamber, declared that Foreign Minister Pichon had said the Entente had decided positively not to send a military expedition to intervene in Russia. Upon this Pichon rose and denied making such a statement.

WARSAW, Thursday, Dec. 26.—German soldiers arriving here from Vilna have brought with them copies of a declaration of Bolshevik principles, which were posted at Vilna. The proclamation, which is addressed to the workers of the world, especially to those in the Central Empires, is signed by Lenine and Sverdloff. It makes these declarations:

The treaty of Brest-Litovsk is abolished.

The last act of former Emperor William was to expel the representative of the Russian government in Berlin.

The treaties with Germany have been annulled by the German and Russian revolutions.

The free Russian people will make a truce peace with those of America, Austria and Germany according to the principles of Lenine.

The right to decide the destinies of nations shall be reserved to the workmen of such nations, while the capitalists, having caused the war, must pay indemnities.

The union of Russia, Austria and Germany must be established on the ruins of militarism, imperialism and economic slavery.

It is hoped that all nations will join such a union after the Russian union has succesfully opposed the foreign bourgeoisie. The Russian union will never submit to Anglo-American imperialism.

The working class of the Entente must force their governments to a peace negotiated with the mass of the Russian people.

The Russian soviet will use its forces to oppose foreign capitalism, and will protect the people liberated from German domination.

FRENCH DRIVE UKRAINE TROOPS FROM ODESSA.

WHITE FLAG HOISTED BY GOVERNMENT ARMY; ULTIMATUM HANDED THEM.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ODESSA, Thursday, Dec. 19.—The street fighting, lasting thirteen hours, which greeted the French entry into the Ukraine, ceased at 5 p.m. yesterday, when republican officers under a white flag appeared at French headquarters. They said that the battle had been begun against the Russian volunteer army, which had declared itself the enemy of the present republic directorate of the Ukraine, but that the republicans refused to oppose the superior force of the French.

Gen. Borins, commanding the French troops, in reply told the officers that the volunteer army was now under French command. He delivered an ultimatum demanding that the republicans leave the city within a half-hour, abandoning their arms and the rolling stock on the Kiev railroad. The republican staff withdrew five miles outside Odessa, leaving considerable quantities of munitions, several cannon and about 500 prisoners, but the majority of its force, numbering about 8000, still under arms, is outside the city.

During yesterday's fighting modern weapons were used by both sides, from armored cars and machine guns to big cannon. The principal squares, the postoffice and railway station show a multitude of scars as a result of the conflict. The French acted as reserves, leaving the direct engagements to the volunteers, who suffered about 100 casualties. Only one Frenchman was wounded, but Gen. Borins threatened to use the French in an attack unless the republicans surrendered immediately.

Serious fighting began at the moment the schools were dismissing, thus exposing hundreds of children to bullets. Many of the children remained in the schoolhouses during the night.

Gen. Borins today ordered the German troops throughout the Ukraine to assist in the maintenance of order, under severe penalties for failure to do so. It is believed the republicans are unable to summon an effective military force against the French, and that, therefore, the existence of the directorate is insecure. M. Henno, the French diplomatic representative, however, admits the gravity of the task of preserving order throughout the Ukraine, owing to diverse racial hatreds.

ASKS AMERICA NOT TO PUSH BUSINESS DEMON.

FRENCH MUNITION MINISTER PLEADS THAT WE COMPLETE WORLD WORK.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—Albert Thomas, former Minister of Munitions and French Socialist leader, writes an editorial in L'Information under the heading, "To Our American Friends," in which he deplores what he calls the completeness with which Americans have abandoned consideration of war problems to devote themselves to business. He says he hears much talk of agreements with French industry, notably offers made to chemical products manufacturers to become the agents in France for American producers.

"May I venture to say," he writes, "that this state of mind is not good and is contrary to the conception of a world organization as formulated by President Wilson. America's immense services to France were not limited to the sending of great numbers of soldiers at the most tragic moment of the war, but America's resources were put in common in the organizations which regulated the reserves of money, raw materials, ships and manufactured articles.

"Economic agreements and conventions are the Entente cement for the victory which has been won. Americans say that their work is finished, but they are wrong."

The article pleads for a continuation of the economic Entente to prevent speculators from exploiting the various countries, and asks Americans to complete their military victory by generous aid toward reconstruction in which "the business demon" should not have first place.

MISSION FINDS HUNS WELL FED.

People in Germany Have as Much as French or British.

Allied Officers Inspect Naval Bases of Teutons.

Many Undeclared Submarines Discovered.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Friday, Dec. 27.—(British Wireless Service.) Bearing an Allied commission which inspected German naval bases and airship and seaplane stations under the terms of the armistice, the British battleship Hercules has returned to her home port. During a trip fraught with peril, many German ports were visited and preliminary arrangements for the surrender of German warships made.

A dramatic episode was the passage of the Kiel Canal on last December 18. Accompanied by the British destroyers Verdun and Viceroy, the Hercules gave the Germans along the banks of the canal their first sight of the British flag since 1914. Germans who watched the ships were indifferently curious, but not infrequently women and children waved their hands. There was not the slightest response from the ships.

Discipline on board the German warships is very low, according to officers of the Hercules. They found on the first enemy ships boarded sailors lounging about the ships, which were in bad condition as a result of neglect.

This was in direct violation of the terms of the armistice, and action was taken by the inspecting officer. He notified the Germans that the ships must be cleared of sailors, and if his orders were not obeyed he would return to the Hercules and report that he was obstructed in his work. Fearful of probable consequences, the German seamen left their ships at once.

PEOPLE WELL FED.

Inspection of airplane and seaplane stations required considerable land travel, which permitted the members of the commission to gain information as to the condition of the people. It is reported that every one encountered in Germany seemed as well clothed and fed as are the people of France and England. Winter crops, owing to the mild season, are doing well, and the land is well cultivated and fertilized.

Admiral Sir Montague Browning, head of the commission, was accompanied by the best men from all Allied nations available. They met interminable objections, obstructions and evasions by the Germans, but the commission ultimately was able to induce the Germans to find means to fulfill many points of the armistice which they at first flatly refused to carry out.

Admiral Goette of the German navy seems to be the only senior German officer still on duty. Admiral Von Scheer and Admiral Von Ripper apparently have disappeared into the same obscurity which hides Gen. Ludendorff and other former leaders. A notable member of the German commission was Capt. Von Muller of the first Emden, to whom the British press paid tribute at the time his ship was sunk, because of "sportsmanship." Unfortunately the identity of Capt. Von Muller was not definitely known to the Allied commission until after the final conference at Kiel was over.

DISCIPLINE MAINTAINED.

Discipline at airship and seaplane stations was better than on the German warships. The Norderney seaplane station is said to compare most favorably with any station of its kind in France and England, while the great Lordholz Zeppelin depot is declared to be the finest in the world. It was from here that virtually all German raiders bound for England started.

At Warnemunde, where a great experimental station was established by the Germans, the Allied commission met with difficulty when it asked permission to carry out the work of inspection. It was only under protest that the members were permitted to enter, the Germans fearing revelations of what they had accomplished.

The submarine commission, under Lieutenant-Commander Bower, pushed its investigations assiduously at Hamburg, Bremen and other points, with the result that scores of U-boats nearly all near completion and hitherto undeclared by the Germans were found and reported. Admiral Goette protested to the last against giving up these submarines, but at a final conference consented.

SWEEP UP MINES.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

LONDON, Dec. 21.—(By mail to New York, Dec. 28.) British mine sweepers will have their hands full for some time in carrying out clause 24 of the armistice, which provides that the associated governments shall have the right to sweep up all mine fields and obstructions laid by Germany outside German territorial waters, the positions of which are to be indicated by the Germans.

Throughout the war these mine sweepers have been doing silently and fearlessly a notable work. Each month the mine sweepers have combed 46,000 miles of water. To do this they steamed a total of 1,132,000 miles.

In 1916, 21,000 mines were removed with a loss of fifty-one mine sweepers. In 1917, 43,000 mines were swept up and eighty-nine mine sweepers were lost. In 1918 up to the end of September 1400 mines were swept up and nineteen sweepers lost.

DUTCH PERMIT KAISER TO REMAIN IN SAFETY.

[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

AMERONGEN (Holland) Dec. 2 (delayed.)—With regard to the possible extradition of the former Kaiser it is understood that the commission appointed by the Dutch government to investigate the legal aspects of the question is still sitting and that no decision has yet been reached.

The members of Wilhelm's entourage have expressed the opinion that the Dutch government will not take any step on its own initiative though what may be the ground for this idea no one appears able to state. But in conversation they have taken a serious view of the possible consequence of the legal steps which have been taken by women whose husbands lost their lives in submarine outrages because of the fact that these women have acted on the strength of verdicts of murder which coroners' juries have passed against the ex-Kaiser.

It is understood, however, that there is no truth in the report that the Dutch government has tried to persuade the royal fugitive to leave Holland.

RESTRAINT PUT UPON GERMANS.

Americans Curtailed Privileges in Occupied Zone.

Every Person Must Carry an Identification Card.

Public Gatherings Barred Except by Permission.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

COBLENZ, Friday, Dec. 27.—Rules for the guidance of inhabitants of regions occupied by American forces were issued today by Gen. Pershing.

Except for minor regulations, the Americans have not interfered in local affairs up until today. Cafes have been open and theaters filled. Newspapers, until recently, have published without restraint, while crowds promenaded the streets until midnight, and even later.

The Germans had come to believe that such conditions would continue, and while there was no serious incident as a result of the tolerant rule of the Americans, it was deemed best to check any tendency toward abuse.

HUNS MUST OBEY.

The regulations published today were signed by Gen. James W. McAndrew, chief of staff, "by command of Gen. Pershing." An effort was made to avoid inclusion of any rules which would merely humiliate the population, or which savored of retaliation or revenge.

Under the terms of the regulations, the authorities will know the exact whereabouts of every individual, for each must carry an identification card and give notice of changes of habitation. Householders must keep posted on their doors a list of residents of their buildings, with their ages, nationality and occupations. All weapons and ammunition must be surrendered. The gathering of crowds is forbidden, and no meetings except courts, schools, councils and religious services will be allowed without permission.

The people are informed that a military court will punish anyone attacking or impeding American soldiers or officers, and those who destroy or injure property belonging to or used by the army, or "who commits any act whatever injurious to the American army."

The custom of soldiers trading or selling chocolate or soap to the Germans is forbidden.

NEW REGULATIONS.

Among other things, the new rules provide:

"The sale or gift of all alcoholic drinks except light wines and beer is forbidden. Alcohol for medicinal or industrial purposes does not come within this prohibition. The sale or gift of light wine and beer is prohibited except from 11 o'clock to 2 p.m. and from 5 o'clock p.m. to 9 o'clock p.m.

"Mail is subject to censorship by the American military authorities. The use of the telegraph and long-distance telephone is forbidden except by permission from the local military commander. The use of aerial wireless apparatus is forbidden. No person may, without authority from the local military commander, transmit any message or communication to any person outside the territory occupied by American troops except through the postoffice.

"The use of carrier pigeons is forbidden.

"The taking of photographs outdoors, except by permission from the local military authorities, is forbidden."

DR. TANNER PASSES.

Disciple of Fasting as Cure for all Ills Succumbs at San Diego Home.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, Dec. 28.—Dr. Harry C. Tanner, famous throughout the country for his long fasts, died at his home in this city today. Dr. Tanner was 91 years old. He was a native of England and was for years an advocate of clean living and of fasting as a remedy for ills.

At one time he fasted for forty-nine days without any food and then went without water for fourteen more days. This was just after the Messina earthquake when it was reported that a man and woman went without food for twelve days. "That's nothing," said Dr. Tanner; "it can be done for twice that long." He then proceeded to prove it.

Dr. Tanner has no relatives so far as known. He came heer from Long Beach several years ago to make his home.

BAY CITY BOYS MISSING.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA BEACH, Dec. 28.—Early yesterday morning, Carl Robbins and John Matson, two 15-year-old boys, went up the beach road intending to get holly. When they failed to return at dusk, their mothers became anxious and informed the police. A searching party went up the road along the ocean for a distance of many miles and found traces of the lads at Jack Henry's place near the gate to the Malibu ranch. All this morning other searching parties were out. At noon someone telephoned to one of the mothers that her boy had been seen. But for some reason or other the lads did not return home. It is surmised that they feared parental discipline.

BEST ATTENTION GIVEN WOUNDED

American Soldiers Met by Good Samaritans Here.

After Rest When Debarked They will go Near Home.

Medical Men and Nurses Accompany All Injured.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—November's swing of the pendulum of history from war to peace, which reversed the eastward flow of America's fighting millions—the greatest transoceanic troop movement ever known—brought the American people face to face with the tragedy of the casualty lists.

Gen. Pershing's announcement that more than 58,000 of the Expeditionary Forces had given their lives in the nation's cause, and that 14,000 others, exclusive of prisoners, were missing, created a profound impression, but the human touch of almost 190,000 wounded, 16,000 of whom already have been returned in various stages of helplessness to their native shores, promises to give the country its first real appreciation of the sacrifices of its sons who followed the flag on foreign soil.

The method of their debarkation denies to the home-coming wounded the popular honors paid their comrades in full health. But the War Department, operating along lines intended to give the lie to the proverbial "ingratitude of government," has arranged for medical, recreational and educational attention whose aim is to restore these maimed heroes, as fully as possible, to physical comfort and financial independence.

GOOD SAMARITANS.

From the day of their arrival at New York or Newport News, the ports of debarkation, to their reentrance into civilian life, a host of Good Samaritans — army doctors, nurses and orderlies and workers of the American Red Cross—will minister to these sufferers from a ruthless enemy's engines of war. Harbor hospital boats, debarkation hospitals, hospital trains and general hospitals for reconstruction or convalescence from a chain of service linking the westward-bound fleets of transports with the homes of the wounded. And in this service the medical debarkation corps, suddenly thrust into the foreground of publicity by the collapse of the Central Powers, plays an important and picturesque part.

The end of the war found the port medical authorities prepared to shoulder the heavy burden laid upon them. During nineteen months of American participation in the conflict they had maintained an embarkation hospital service, treating the comparatively rare cases of illness among troops ready to go overseas. When American forces entered the trenches small groups of wounded, evacuated from hospitals in France, began to filter through the service on this side of the Atlantic. With this experience accentuated by the lessons of the Allied governments in repatriating their wounded, the debarkation system was put in readiness for the reception of injured men at the rate of 10,000 to 15,000 a month.

During the war and a five weeks' period following the signing of the armistice, approximately 11,500 wounded had been received at New York and 4500 at Newport News. And the authorities were prepared, on official advices from Washington, to handle 50,000 cases in the next four months.

DEBARKATION SERVICE.

The army debarkation service at New York, which sent three-fourths of the nation's 2,000,000 men overseas, is expected to debark a majority of the returning forces, and the westward flow of wounded also will be directed here, with some diversion to Newport News and possibly, later on, to Boston. To carry on the work at this port the medical department has a personnel of 7306—greater than the entire Army Medical Corps when the United States entered the war. On this staff, headed by Col. J. M. Kennedy, veteran of twenty-five years' service as an army surgeon, 950 are medical officers, 983 nurses, men and women, 5184 enlisted men and 189 civilian employees.

The operating facilities include eight debarkation hospitals with an aggregate of capacity of 10,900 beds, two base hospitals with 4250 beds, a reconstruction hospital at Columbia University for cases too serious to be moved to interior institutions, five harbor hospital boats with 300 beds each, seventy-five ambulances, with fifty additional held in reserve by the Red Cross, and four hospital trains each accommodating upwards of 200 patients.

The base hospitals are at Camps Merritt and Mills, former embarkation, now debarkation cantonments for the overseas army. The debarkation hospitals are strategically located on or near the harbor front.

The port medical authorities, responsible for soldier patients from the time of their arrival from Europe to their delivery at general hospitals nearest their home communities, aim to clear their charges from the debarkation hospitals within a week. The work begins at the port quarantine station. Here medical officers board incoming transports and assist the doctors aboard in preparing the men for landing. In practically all cases the wounded are taken directly from the ship to the harbor hospital boat, which conveys them to a pier near one of the debarkation hospitals, where ambulances are in waiting.

While the men get their "shore bearings" their cases are studied and assignments made to reconstruction or convalescent hospitals.

The next process is the attachment of a medical liaison officer to the group he is to conduct to an interior station. When he has become familiar with his charges he applies for a hospital car or train, according to the size of his party, and for an escort of doctors, nurses and orderlies. If a train is assigned, the journey, even across the continent, is simple, but if the wounded fill only one car, which must be attached to regular trains, the feeding problem becomes acute. Here the Red Cross lends its aid, arranging by telegraph with its auxiliaries along the way for meals for the travelers at points where neither dining car service nor station restaurants are available.

The hospital trans, equipped with specially constructed Pullman sleeping and kitchen cars, have accommodations both for "walking cases" and for men so severely injured that they must remain abed both day and night. In anticipation of their use on an extensive scale, fifty officers and 200 men are in training here, and a smaller company at Newport News, as escort detachments.

CARRANZA FACES NEW REBELLION

Rebel Chiefs Plotting His Overthrow Soon.

Rich Exiles Willing to Finance Revolution.

Mexico Disappointed in Rule of President.

ownership in Mexico is practically the same as it was in the days of Diaz with the exception that perhaps three-fourths of the landed proprietors are being forced to live outside of the country and their respective properties are being pillaged and operated for the benefit of whoever may want to do so.

Strange to say, Francisco Villa and Emiliano Zapata, the two irrepressible revolutionary leaders, have accomplished something in the way of carrying out the plan inaugurated by Madero of confiscating and dividing the big landed estates among the peon, or working class. For more than three years several hundred thousand acres of land in the State of Chihuahua that were taken over by Villa and divided among the former ranch employees have been operated by the new owners for their own benefit.

In the rich State of Morelos, where, in the pre-revolutionary days, most of the land was owned by Spaniards and devoted to growing sugar cane, Zapata has provided homes for thousands of poor people on these productive estates to the exclusion of their Spanish owners. In this connection it is stated that the sugar cane crop this year in Morelos was the largest in the history of that industry there. Several sugar mills were operated under the direction of Zapata and his men, and there has been accumulated enormous stores of raw sugar which is awaiting an outlet to markets.

ARMY OFFICERS INDEPENDENT.

If reports received here are to be believed, Carranza's hold upon the Federal army is rapidly passing away. While there have been no open revolts of the government troops the higher military officers in charge of army operations are showing a growing disposition to conduct affairs according to their own ideas without regard to orders that may come to them from Carranza. One of the recent incidents of this kind is the action of Gen. Pablo Gonzales, who was directed by Carranza to conduct an active campaign against Zapata. Gen. Gonzales made a short advance into the State of Morelos and then for some unexplained reason withdrew his troops and has made public announcement that he has abandoned his campaign against the revolutionary leader.

Banditry conditions in the immediate vicinity of the City of Mexico, aside from the constant menace of troops under Zapata, are causing no little alarm in government official circles, according to advices received here. From the States of Vera Cruz and Oaxaca come reliable reports that the revolutionary campaign under Felix Diaz shows strong signs of reviving. Diaz, who is said to have the support of members of the old Cientifico party who are now in exile, held his revolutionary plans in abeyance while the great war was in progress.

Even during the time, however, that he was inactive in waging a fight against the Carranza government he and his supporters were in complete control of political and government affairs of Oaxaca and the more southern parts of the State of Vera Cruz. They still retain this power, and during the last few weeks they have succeeded in organizing a large military force, it is claimed by supporters of that cause. Diaz's operations are to be directed against the city and port of Vera Cruz in the immediate future.

MAY TAKE VERA CRUZ.

In the event he is able to secure control of that port he will be placed in a strong position. Gen. Candido Aguilar, Federal commander in the State of Vera Cruz, has only a few thousand men under him and this force is not being used to wage any active campaign against the Diaz revolutionists, according to arrivals here from that part of the country. In fact, Gen. Aguilar is said to be showing a tendency to assist Diaz in his revolutionary plans. This charge at least is being made against him by authorities of the Carranza government.

There can be no doubt of the fact that Villa's reorganized army in the State of Chihuahua is of such strength as to well warrant alarm on the part of the Carranza government. Gen. Felipe Angeles, who bears the reputation of being the most capable military leader in Mexico, recently joined Villa. Gen. Angeles is of French blood and during the last three years he has devoted his time and energy to working for the French government. At the time the armistice was signed he was inspector of small arms for that government in New York. Whether or not he brought to Villa any new financial support in his revolutionary undertakings is not publicly known. It is regarded as significant, however, that the Villa revolution seems to have taken on new and marked strength since Gen. Angeles again became actively connected with it.

One of the stimulating influences tion of Mexico at this time is that peace and order must come to the country now that the world war is ended. That the signing of the armistice has had a big psychological effect upon the turbulent element of Mexico is very apparent. Continuation of internal troubles in this country would mean the inviting of intervention on the part of the United States and possibly England and France, it is asserted.

This fact is now recognized by the Carranza government as it never was before, according to men who are in close touch with high public officials in the business and political situation in the City of Mexico. It is generally believed here that there is more than a possibility that the Mexico situation will be dealt with at the coming peace conference.

Whatever may be the cause of the improvement in business and industrial conditions in a large area of Mexico, this betterment is having the effect of restoring the confidence and optimism of investors and the people generally.

Complete restoration of the mining, manufacturing and commercial industries of Mexico cannot be hoped for until the rehabilitation of the railroads is accomplished. Much difficulty is experienced in moving even small shipments and unless the physical condition of the railroad lines is improved and more equipment provided there can be no general resumption of business in this country, it is asserted. To the larger cities, such as Monterey, Torreon, San Luis Potosi and Guadalajara, railroad traffic is fairly good, but there is very little transportation service upon the several branch lines and even upon some of the divisions of the trunk roads.

It is the expressed opinion of business men of Mexico that if the railroads of the country could be restored to their normal condition wonderful strides in industrial development and progress would be immediately inaugurated. Even under the more or less unsatisfactory existing state of affairs arrangements are being made for the running of a number of trade excursions to this country from different cities in the United States during the early part of the coming year. There promises to be strenuous competition between the various commercial and manufacturing interests of that country for Mexican trade. It is stated plans are now on foot for special trade excursions to Mexico from San Antonio, El Paso, St. Louis, Mo., and New Orleans. The itinerary of these proposed excursions will be necessarily limited, but it will extend as far south as the City of Mexico.

MECCA FOR TOURISTS.

In the pre-revolutionary days Mexico had become the Mecca for thousands of American tourists each winter. Many special excursion trains were run to this country for the benefit of these pleasure-seekers. They not only visited the principal industrial centers of the country, but they usually traveled as far south as the isthmus of Tehauntepec, where they obtained a whiff of the atmosphere of the tropics, saw the wonderful ruins of a past race at Mitla and other historic places, revelled in the snows at the apex of Popocatapetl, and returned refreshed and with a broader knowledge of the country which lay to the south of the Rio Grande.

Naturally, there will be a resumption of this tourist traffic in due time. During the last eight years of turbulency in the country no American pleasure-seekers have cared to come here.

Now that there is an unusually good opportunity for the expansion of American trade in Mexico it is urged that merchants of the United States who desire to do business here make a study of the regulations and requirements that they must observe in order to be successful in their trade programme. It is pointed out that the fact does not seem to be realized by American merchants that on all goods shipped to Mexico, either by mail or by freight, duties are collected on the gross weight of goods and packing, not on the value, as they are in the United States. If, when shipping goods to Mexico, you use too much wrapper, or too heavy a box, the duties the purchaser has to pay are entirely out of proportion to what he should pay.

An increase in the coastwise traffic between ports of Mexico and the United States has taken place during the last few months. With many additional ships available for the carrying of ocean-going trade it is expected that there will be a continued and rapid increase in the shipments through the gulf ports of Tampico, Vera Cruz, Coatzacoalcos and Progreso. Resumption of coastwise steamer service on the Pacific Coast of Mexico is also announced.

FRUIT-TRADE PROSPECT.

Prospects are said to be favorable for the building up of a large tropical fruit trade between Mexico and the United States. Large banana plantations, owned principally by American interests, are already located in the States of Tabasco and Campeche and before revolutionary troubles in this country became serious there was a regular line of banana boats plying between Frontera, Mex., and Galveston. Pineapples and citrus fruits may also be grown in almost unlimited quantities in the tropical parts of this country.

The principal coffee-growing region of Guatemala borders the State of Chiapas, Mexico. With the construction of the Pan-American Railroad from San Geronimo on the isthmus of Tehuantepec to Ayutla on the border line of Guatemala and Mexico large areas of land in Chiapas were planted to coffee. With the reopening of the regular traffic of the Pan-American Railroad and the shipping outlet thus afforded by its connecting lines it is expected that there will be a big development of the coffee-growing industry in far Southeastern Mexico.

There is also a revival in the rubber production of that part of the country. Many rubber-tree plantations have reached the producing stage and will yield a large output this year, according to advices received here.

URGE OLD BASIS TO DIVIDE SCHOOL FUND.

DECREASED ATTENDANCE CAUSED BY FLU WOULD CUT STATE AID.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 28.—Emergency legislation providing for the apportionment of State school funds for the term of 1919-1920 on the basis of the average daily attendance during the term of 1917-1918, instead of the current year, probably will be recommended at the forthcoming session of the State Legislature, it was announced today at the office of the State Board of Education.

The influenza epidemic in this State has resulted in a decrease in the average daily attendance in practically every city and country school district, it was said. In a number of sections the reduced attendance has been so pronounced that officials believe the State apportionment, if made on the basis of average attendance for the current year, would be so small that the money available would enable them to operate only a few months.

Do You Have to Amuse Dinner Partners?

To be sprightly at teas? To deal—instantly—with stout hostesses, clever bachelors, dearest friends, golf fiends, vers librists, dog lovers, military critics, Japanese symbolists, Russian decorative painters? To be at home—easily—in discussions of early Chinese art, the way Jock Hutchison uses his right arm, and why Marie Doro left the movies? To meet any social situation whatever, and talk your way airily through it?

Dress Your Mind by Vanity Fair

Charming women put as much thought on their conversation as they do on their frocks. They know what's being talked about. And what's being said about it.

They know the latest and most brilliant achievements in music, painting, sculpture, books, sports, dancing, the stage. They are familiar with the last vagary of the mode, the latest gaiety of society, the new philosophy.

They know how to write vers-libre on their dinner cards, how to wear a tiara without hatpins, how to tell a Newport dowager from a duchess, and how to amuse a celebrity.

They are, in short, au courant of the artistic, intellectual, and social world, the world of cultivated men and women.

How do they do it? Quite simply! They read, every month, the one magazine whose every issue contains accounts of the newest and most diverting personalities, movements, and achievements from the ever-changing kaleidoscope of cosmopolitan existence: Vanity Fair.

TRIP TO BERLIN MADE VIA AIR.

Correspondent is First Writer to Enter Capital.

Submarine Campaign Blamed for Loss of War.

Conditions in Germany are Told by Eyewitness.

BY FREDERICK A. SMITH.
[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]
[Copyright.]

[Following is the third article of a series written by Frederick A. Smith, first American correspondent to enter Berlin following the war, for exclusive publication in this section of The Times. The series will continue from day to day until the exact situation in Germany is fully set forth by first-hand information.]

WITHIN REVOLUTIONARY GERMANY, BY WAY OF PARIS, Dec. 28.—Leaving Coblenz we motored under the bright moon and stars along the Rhine with our German army chauffeur making such speed that it was impossible to make our glimpses of famous castles and old world towns more than momentary flashes of pictures or silhouettes. Dawn was adding to the beauties of the river and mountains as we left the Rhine, and we took one last look at the somber ruins and vineclad heights before turning our faces toward Mainz and Frankfort.

Among the leaders of the workers and soldiers at Frankfort was Herman Wendel, who also declared he favored publicity regarding German economic conditions—he being a member of the late Reichstag and now most active in revolutionary affairs.

Wendel said the German military breakdown was due primarily to the submarine programme, which always was unpopular with the people.

He also declared the breakdown was due to the collapse of the spring drive and to Ludendorff's meddling in politics, after promising the smash on the west front was a peace offensive.

HEAR LEADER SPEAK.

Wendel and Walter Loeb, another member of the Frankfort committee, invited us to a theater where a revolutionary leader was to speak. There we heard an address in which a crowded house was assured Germany's hope lay in President Wilson and America. A man in the center of the throng arose, proposing three cheers for President Wilson and America, which were given with a great will, apparently being unanimous.

I saw many people and visited many stores in Frankfort, obtaining material for a comprehensive analysis of the food situation.

An illuminating sidelight on Germany's eagerness to prove the need for food to be supplied was the voluntary offer by Frankfort to send me to Berlin in an airplane because the conditions were so unsettled.

Heinrich Hoffmann, an energetic aviator, was introduced as my pilot. Hoffmann, a youngster of 23, was wearing the cross of Bayern, the iron cross and other decorations, showing he had been wounded five times. The last wound was inflicted by an American flyer in a hot fight over Frankfort.

WEAKENED MACHINE.

At the aviation field the mechanics wheeled out a Halberstadt biplane, one of them making the comforting remark that it was not much good, all the top-notch machines having been taken elsewhere. I was assisted into a knitted wool helmet, leather mask, and soon was taking my first leave of the ground in a flying craft.

The propeller yanked us forward, giving me the same chilly shock that I suffered on the Lorraine last July, when a great wave struck the side of the ship, just as I was taking a rubdown after a bath, and drove a torrent of water through the porthole, knocking me off my feet and thoroughly drenching the sartorial equipment.

I soon began to enjoy the smooth flight upward, although the smashing gale from the propeller was much stronger than I had anticipated. We headed from Berlin at approximately 100 miles an hour with nothing to do except to keep my head behind Hoffmann's back to escape the terrific rush of air, and occasionally peering out at the German landscape which, from a height of 2000 meters, revealed fields of variegated tans and greens with splotches of red-tiled roofs for warmth, and stretches of black forests to complete the illusion that an enormous Persian shawl was unrolling beneath us.

AIRPLANE SAGS.

Hoffmann managed the plane with a map between his knees, constantly looking downward on either side to follow the rivers and railroads and towns. After a while the thunderous roar of the motor stopped and the machine sagged with a sickening inertia, Hoffmann heading it straight for a village at an angle of 45 deg. Gripping the frail wood brace, I thought of many airplanes I had seen on the west front with their noses dug into the ground and their wings shattered, but the motor started again and the plane leveled out.

Hoffmann had performed a maneuver to get a better look at the village, which he explained to me afterward did not seem to belong on the map. Many other evolutions followed before we made a cautious descent at Cassel for gas. Here Field Marshal Hindenburg granted an interview.

Darkness forced the second landing at Nordhausen, where we spent the night, resuming the voyage to Berlin at 12:15 p.m.

The day before we had passed through clouds and over snow-tipped mountains, but today was clear and the inspection of the country was proceeding when Hoffmann suddenly tossed his right hand above his head, snatching the goggles which had been torn from his eyes by the wind. He waved the goggles wildly, and recognizing how the hundred-mile wind was pounding his unprotected eyeballs, I stood up on the tiny seat and readjusted the goggles, thereupon formally declaring myself out of aviation forever.

Again Hoffmann raised his hand a few minutes later, and following his gesture I looked ahead toward a great city, a wide expanse of masonry, parks and thoroughfares, leaving no doubt that here was Berlin.

After jockeying for a good landing position which gave a further opportunity for study of the German capital from the clouds, Hoffmann brought the plane to earth and we skimmed forward to one of the hangars of the famous Aldershof field. We had come from Nordhausen in one hour and thirty-five minutes.

We entered a military automobile and soon were speeding down Unter den Linden, with the red flag of the revolution flying from the windsills and a soldier on the front seat beside the chauffeur with a rifle on one arm and that familiar white brassard on the other. Hoffmann sat by my side and as the chauffeur turned corners at high speed, this hitherto calm airman seemed nervous, which earned for the chauffeur my sincerest gratitude.

"CALIFORNIA ALPS."

WILLIAM KEITH'S GREAT PICTURE PURCHASED BY FRANK A. MILLER OF RIVERSIDE MISSION INN.

The acquisition by Frank A. Miller of Riverside, of "California Alps," a celebrated masterpiece from the brush of William Keith, one of the world's most distinguished artists, is a matter of gratification to California art lovers.

This wonderful painting, which is a very large canvas even for a Keith, being over 7 by 11 feet in dimensions, including the frame, will be hung permanently in Mr. Miller's collection in Mission Inn, Riverside, where it may be viewed by the general public.

Connoisseurs everywhere recognize William Keith as one of the world's foremost artists, and his pictures adorn the walls of famous galleries in America and Europe.

George Inness, in speaking of Keith, said: "No other artist of the century could carry a picture so far by the first intention, except perhaps Rousseau."

Keith knew California as did few other artists, and he was at his best in his interpretation of its scenic grandeur.

"California Alps" reflects the spirit of the Sierras. In the immediate foreground is a sunlit valley, with a small lake on the right. In the background, thick woods climbing up the mountains' rocky sides, are skirted by a silvery stream. On the left giant trees, typically Keith in coloring, give contrast to the warm glow of the mountains farther away.

The real glory of the picture, however, is the great mass of mountains, snow-covered and dim, in the sunlit mist that occupy the upper part of the picture, in the distance.

No finer view can be found in the Swiss Alps than that revealed here in the California Alps that Keith so dearly loved. The soft coloring is exquisite. It is a scene that one could sit and view and never tire of; a scene that takes one into the gentle heart of nature in its most peaceful and inspiring mood.

Such pictures by Keith should never leave California, unless it be to interpret California to the world, and Mr. Miller is fortunate in having been able to procure this splendid specimen of Keith's art for his wonderful Mission Inn collection of pictures.

IN TROUSERS, BUT GIRL.

Youthful Target Shooter Warned Not to Pose as Boy nor to Use Air Rifle in City.

Three police juvenile officers broke up an exciting shooting contest in a vacant lot at First and Hope streets yesterday and arrested the two ringleaders, who had air rifles in their hands. Tin cans were targets.

On the way to the station one of the youngsters tucked a long lock of hair back under "his" cap, which led to the discovery that "he" was Miss Juanita Stuart, 14 years old, of No. 700 West First street. The youthful Amazon, who was attired in khaki trousers and leggings, flannel shirt and boy's sweater, protested tearfully when her mother was instructed to burn the costume and keep the young lady in feminine apparel only hereafter.

She and the other youngster, James Edward Baker, 11, of No. 105 South Bunker Hill, were then told that they mustn't fire air guns within the city limits and sent home.

FRANCE ASKS ALLIES TO HELP REBUILDING.

WAR SACRIFICES CAUSE LACK OF LABOR DURING PERIOD OF RESTORATION.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

BALTIMORE, Dec. 28. — With 2,500,000 of her youngest, ablest and most splendid men maimed or killed, and upward of half her industry and shipping destroyed by the war, France's appeal to her allies during the period of rehabilitation will be for help in rebuilding the factories and farms which the Germans wrecked, and for assistance in constructing or purchasing ships. Edouard de Billy, deputy high commissioner of the French republic, declared here today in an address before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

He denied that France is "bled white," but said the handicap imposed as a result of her sacrifices in resisting the invader could not be overcome except with outside aid.

He declared that 26,000 factories in the French districts occupied by the Germans were destroyed or stripped of their machinery; that almost 12,000,000 head of cattle were seized; that thousands of miles of farm land, devastated by shells, was made unfit for cultivation; that the net loss in ship tonnage, through sinkings and enforced curtailment in production, was 670,000 tons, and that the money cost of the conflict, in appropriations and public debt, aggregated 138,000,000,000 francs.

ARMY COLLEGE BOYS DISCHARGED IN TURN.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Secretary of War Baker has disapproved a suggestion that men in the army who are wanted for educational work should be given preferential consideration in the matter of discharge from military service.

The Secretary's views in the matter are contained in a letter to Senator New of Indiana from Assistant Secretary of War Keppel, who had sought information on the subject.

"You will remember," wrote Mr. Keppel, "that you spoke to me about the possibility of having men, now in the army, discharged for the purpose of taking up educational work at the beginning of the new year. I spoke personally to the Secretary of War about this, and after considering the question he has sent me a memorandum as follows:

"'I have thought as hard about this as I can, and am clear that if we were to make a favored class of the college boys by directing their preferential demobilization, it would cause grave criticism and dissatisfaction through the country. The progress of demobilization is already rapid, the number per week being about 140,000, and it will increase that so before very long we will have all of the men now in camps in this country out. I think under all the circumstances, it would be unwise to attempt the project herein recommended.'"

PLANS TO FLY ACROSS ATLANTIC IN ONE DAY.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

TORONTO, Dec. 28.—With a five-engined Handley Page airplane, of about 2000 horse power, Lieut.-Col. C. R. Collishaw of Nanaimo, B. C., said yesterday he would attempt a flight early in April across the Atlantic, leaving from Newfoundland. He expects to make the trip of 1800 miles in twenty-four hours.

Besides himself the machine will carry two pilots and an operator.

SAYS JAPAN HAS NO TERRITORIAL CLAIMS.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

TOKIO, Nov. 27.—Japan's attitude at the peace conference should be one of disinterestedness as far as territorial gain is concerned, in the opinion of T. Inukai, the leader of the Kokuminto political party. The statesman said the other day that Japan's actions hitherto have been liable to misunderstanding as possibly actuated by territorial ambition, and Japan should seize the first opportunity to disabuse the world of any misapprehension.

At the same time Mr. Inukai thought it desirable that the United States and other countries should freely open their doors for the admission of aliens, thus bringing up again a question which in the past has caused considerable negotiations between the United States and Japan. With the world's tendency toward forming republics it would be necessary, he said, for the Japanese to carefully ponder over the future of their own country. Japan could prohibit the import of foreign books, but she could not prevent the influx of foreign ideas, dangerous or otherwise.

Heralding a New Year of Unparalleled Promise—

A GLAD and GOLDEN YEAR of BETTER HOMES!

To look ahead ten or fifty or a hundred years and plan, in the light of that vision, a home worthy of your ideals—a heritage worthy of your children and of your dreams for them! This is a purpose befitting the wonderful era of better things which this New Year will usher in.

It is never too soon to start building toward your dream-home. Persons have planned to have a better home when they should become rich and "not so busy."

But when this time comes, at least, too often they have grown so unaccustomed to intimate association with the beautiful things of living that they can neither enjoy nor appreciate them.

(Years ago, even one satisfying piece of furniture or fold of drapery would have brought a thrill, a hope and an incentive more precious and valuable than a fortune in cold cash!)

Truly, the time for YOU to start the making of a better home is NOW—while it can inspire your virility and your children's youth—while it can help you conform your ideals to its beauties and to mold your hospitality in the pattern of its generous comforts.

And, fortunately, although home-furnishings can cost almost anything, it is cheerfully possible to make a simple home extremely fascinating in a very inexpensive way. Of course, there are certain effects to strive for and certain costly errors to avoid. So it is a saving in many directions to consult with such helpers as Barker Bros. offer you.

We promise you that, if you will joyfully resolve to have a better home in the coming year, this store of talented, trained, experienced home-furnishers—this house of dauntless resources and sincerely smiling service—will help you keep the faith!

WE EARNESTLY wish, for you and for your family and for all your friends, the happiest, richest, kindest New Year that you have ever known or hoped to know!

Yours with deep sincerity,

AID TO MEN AND TO EMPLOYERS.

Federal Employment Service has Useful Function.

Firms Asked to Make Use of its Machinery.

Those Released from War are Found Positions.

Emil J. Bernatche, examiner in charge of the United States Employment Service, has sent out an appeal to employers to use the machinery provided by the government for finding work for returning soldiers, sailors and civilian war workers who have been released from duty.

Mr. Bernatche points out that the employment agency is a government institution, with no fee charged to either employer or employee—that it belongs to the people, just the same as the schools or the public library. He asks that employers discontinue, as far as possible, the hiring of men at their own plants, and secure their help through this service. It is believed that in most instances the majority of employers can wait long enough to secure their men through this agency, thus discouraging the habit of persons going around to the various plants each morning in search of employment.

Attention is called to the fact that hundreds of soldiers, seamen, war workers and other civilians are registering with the service, and Mr. Bernatche is in a position to furnish employers with first-class, experienced help in almost any line of work.

The men's division at No. 206 Court street supplies skilled and unskilled labor of all kinds. The telephone number is Broadway 6624.

The commercial division, room 202 Merchants' Trust Building, No. 207 South Broadway, furnishes professional and technical employees, specializing in high-class office help.

The women's industrial and household division, room 204 Merchants' Trust Building, No. 207 South Broadway, handles hotel and restaurant help, laundry and factory workers and domestic help.

Experienced employment clerks, with years of training, are in charge of each division, and this service satisfactorily places thousands of persons each month, which fact in itself is declared to be ample evidence of the efficiency of the organization.

This organization and its equipment is at the service of the employers of Los Angeles at any time, and they are urged to anticipate their needs and place their orders in advance as much as possible.

OFFER BIG BARGAINS FOR ONE-DAY SALE.

W. A. FARIS WILL TAKE HAND IN FIFTH STREET STORE EVENT TOMORROW.

W. A. Faris, who, with B. M. Walker, owns the Fifth Street Store, will get actively into the selling organization for a special one-day sale tomorrow. Mr. Faris is financial manager of the firm, while Mr. Walker takes care of the merchandise.

"The Fifth Street Store has had a wonderful business during the past year, but because of the influenza epidemic in October and November, we have on hand about $100,000 worth of merchandise that we did not expect to have on January 1," said Mr. Faris yesterday.

"I feel that this is the time when we can give our customers some unusually low prices, because all we are interested in now is to get our money out of the extra stock. I have instructed the various department managers to forget former retail prices for this special one-day sale and the result is that they have lined up some bargains that surpass any that we have offered during the entire year."

This special sale will be known as "Mr. Faris's Day" and the two-page advertisement in The Times today will give Los Angeles buyers an idea of the determination with which Mr. Faris has gone after it with the object in mind to reduce his stock and give his customers the opportunity to buy for less than they have bought perhaps during the period of the war.

MEN OF DRAFT AGE CAN TRAIN ON IRIS.

CHANGE REGULATIONS SO THEY MAY BE ENROLLED FOR SEA TRAINING.

Regulations governing enrollment for service on merchant ships have been changed so as to permit men between the ages of 18 and 35 years, inclusive, to volunteer for sea training aboard the ship Iris, it is announced by Acting Supervisor of Sea Training Henry Avila of San Francisco.

For several months there has been a ban on the acceptance of men of draft age, unless they volunteered as marine firemen. Now that the provisions of the draft are no longer operative, the recruiting service of the Shipping Board is authorized to take men from 18 to 35 years of age and train them for any department the men desire.

Scores of California men are volunteering for the sea training. The national emergency is not over as far as the American merchant marine is concerned. Thousands of new seamen, firemen, oilers, stewards, water tenders and cooks are needed immediately. The Shipping Board proposes to man every new ship and the hundreds now being completed.

Men accepted from California are placed aboard the marine training ship Iris at San Francisco. After six weeks of sea training they are assigned to merchant ships.

Those who want to volunteer for the Iris training may do so by applying at recruiting service headquarters, No. 369 Pine street, San Francisco, in person or by mail. None but Americans are accepted.

SLIGHTS SPOUSE FOR WARRIORS?

Woman Who Gave Soldiers and Seamen Good Time Sued for Divorce.

When Harry Poston, a book-keeper, remonstrated with his wife, Ona J. Poston, because she was giving up too much of her time to the entertainment of soldiers and sailors, Mrs. Poston replied that that was the least she could do toward assisting in war work.

Mrs. Poston, it appears, took soldiers and sailors on long automobile drives, returning to her home where she gave them good dinners. As a hostess she was a success, and the soldiers and seamen voted her a princess. Her aim was to prevent the embryo warriors from feeling lonely.

But while the warriors enjoyed themselves, Mr. Poston felt that he was being neglected. Finally he filed suit for divorce through Attorney E. V. Rosenkranz, alleging mental cruelty. The two were married in 1911.

PROMINENT PIONEER IS CALLED BY DEATH.

WILLIAM WINCUP HAD BEEN ACTIVE IN CITY'S LIFE. FUNERAL TUESDAY.

Los Angeles lost another pioneer when William Wincup, aged 75 years, died on Friday at his residence, No. 1027 West Twenty-third street, of a complication of diseases. Although he had not been well for several weeks, Mr. Wincup refused to take to his bed until ordered to do so by his physician. Funeral services will be conducted at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at Bresee Brothers' chapel and will be in charge of the Masons, with Rev. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, officiating.

William Wincup was born in Toronto, Can., in 1843, his parents having come from England. When 22 years of age, he went to Galesburg, Ill., where he married Miss Clarinda Bruner. From 1862 until 1871 Mr. Wincup was officially connected with the C. B. & Q. Railway Company. In 1871 he went to Peoria, Ill., in which city he had charge of the union ticket office for several years. In 1891 Mr. and Mrs. Wincup came to Los Angeles and Mr. Wincup became interested in the road built from this city to Terminal Island. He bought up all the right of ways for the company and was general passenger agent for the road for several years. Shortly after coming to this city Mr. Wincup was made a member of the Board of Education, serving for several years in that capacity. He was a United Templar, a Shriner and a prominent member of the Jonathan Club. He was familiarly known as "Uncle Billy" and was so called by many Jonathan Club members and other friends who never knew his real name. He was also an active member of the Second Presbyterian Church. His widow survives.

WOULD CHANGE PLEA.

Chinese Sentenced for Having Opium Sorry He Took Advice of a Friend.

A motion out of the ordinary in the prosecution of Chinese criminal cases will be argued before United States District Judge Bledsoe in an effort to have the court vacate a judgment in the case of Soo Hoo Kan, who pleaded guilty to having smoking opium in his possession and was sentenced to eighteen months in the Federal penitentiary at McNeil Island. If the motion is granted, Soo Hoo Kan will withdraw his plea of guilty.

Soo Hoo Kan is a San Luis Obispo Chinese, and understood through a Chinese friend, it is averred, that if he pleaded guilty he would be fined $250. He had the money to pay over, but the court imposed a penitentiary sentence. The Chinese friend who gave him the advice has since died, and now Soo Hoo Kan has concluded that he really was not guilty at all. When he will be allowed to present his excuse remains with the court.

REDUCE JUNK LICENSE.

Fee for Collectors Set Back to Original Figure—Red Cross Competition Hurt.

City Attorney Stephens has been instructed by the Council to prepare an ordinance reducing the license fees of junk collectors. When the ordinance was revised a few months ago, their fee was increased to $5 a month. By the order of the Council it will again be $2 a month.

I. J. Miller told the Council that during the war more than 50 per cent. of the junk collectors went out of business. The Red Cross and other patriotic organizations took most of the cast-off clothes and such material and left them with little to do.

MAKES HIGH AVERAGE.

Westlake School Contestant One of First Five in Examination for Annapolis.

At an examination held for Annapolis appointees at the Federal Building here, the Westlake School for Boys sent two contestants, John P. Gilmer of Hollywood and Harold Miller of Los Angeles. Mr. Gilmer was one of the five of the highest rated applicants, making an average of 83.02. Special courses are now being offered for West Point and Annapolis at this school.

This week the Westlake School will occupy its new premises at No. 812 South Alvarado street. It will takes over one of the buildings formerly occupied by the Denishawn Dancing School. The new location is just opposite the Westlake Park. There are at present students from eight or ten States on the roll.

RELIEF NEEDED IN BIBLE LANDS.

Armenians and Syrians are Said to be Starving.

Half Million Dollars Sought in Southland.

Transport to Take Supplies has been Loaned.

"When is the earliest date that relief ship will reach us?" read a telegram received last week by the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee from Dr. Charles F. Gates, president of Robert College in Constantinople.

A relief transport has been loaned by the United States government, and it is expected that it will be on its way to Constantinople within a few weeks. Dr. Gates says that the expedition should bring money in gold, as the Turkish currency has depreciated almost to the vanishing point, and that as much food and coal should be included as possible.

Food in Turkey is said to be so scarce as to bring the fear of starvation to the Turks. No Turkish cooperation to amount to anything can be relied upon, it is declared. Dr. Gates is president of the greatest missionary college in that part of the Orient, and for months past has been sending out Armenia's S.O.S. to the world, hoping that the people of Christian civilizations will respond to save the remnant of those peoples who gave the world its Bible and much that is worth while in philosophy, literature and plastic arts.

From Port Said, Dr. Howard S. Bliss, president of the American Assyrian College, has cabled that while the American Red Cross has given $300,000 a month to the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee for general work of salvaging lives, the money is not one-tenth what must be had to save those who are on the borderland of starvation.

In a cablegram dated December 26 forwarded from the New York committee to Judge Hugh Neal Wells of Los Angeles, who is managing the local Armenian and Syrian relief campaign, Dr. Bliss says that 12,000 persons are on the verge of death in the villages of Lebanon. Of these 6000 are children between the ages of 6 and 15. The babies are being sent on to relief base hospitals, but not all can be cared for when they arrive.

"You who are in the land of plenty may believe it to be hard to watch beside the bedside of a sick child who has every kind of medical care and loving people to minister," he says, "but how can I tell you the daily grief we suffer when we must pick and choose from children in the street, taking the best ones and leaving the weakest to die? We have to wait until a child is sent on elsewhere, or a bed made vacant by death, before we can take in more. Little hands clutch us as we pass out of the hospital gates. Great eyes in sunken faces speak the want the lips are too weak to frame."

As the countries of Western Asia, such as Armenia, Syria, Arabia, Persia and Palestine, cannot be dealt with as governments, the help must come through philanthropy until the next harvest in the Bible lands. The peace table may give them an autonomous government, but just now they need bread—and a place wherein to lay their head, says Judge Wells.

The American committee is making a drive for $30,000,000 in the United States, of which $500,000 will be raised in Southern California. Judge Wells, who is conducting the campaign from his offices, No. 318 Security Building, is just completing an organization which includes a committee in every city and community in the State south of the Tehachepi.

HULETT C. MERRITT ILL.

Pasadenan's Case for Alleged Hoarding of Sugar May be Further Postponed.

After the case against Hulett C. Merritt, Pasadena millionaire, charged with violation of the anti-hoarding regulations in purchasing and concealing 500 pounds of sugar, has run the gamut of the Federal court and finally is set for trial on Tuesday, it looks as if a further postponement will be sought.

It was reported at the Federal Building yesterday that Mr. Merritt is confined to his Pasadena home by a severe attack of influenza, and is in the care of a physician and a personal nurse. If the certificate of his physician is presented to court showing that his patient is unable to attend, there will be nothing to do but set the case for a later date.

This will be a distinct disappointment to the government, the hope being strong that the case might be tried by what is known as the "war" jury. There will be a new panel drawn about the middle of January—and the war is over.

SAYS AMERICA LEADS WORLD IN EVERYTHING

That the best articles of clothing, the best tobacco and the choicest edibles in the world are produced and manufactured in "the good old U.S.A." is the opinion of Edward John Roloff, who is now in Paris with the Three Hundred and Sixty-second Infantry, Ninety-first Division.

"As to tobacco," he writes, "well, no country ever dreamed about making such cigarettes as Uncle Sam rolls for his boys. And candy? Say, even La Belle France can't dip a chocolate like Miss Columbia. Clothes? Well, we used to think we were getting the finest suits in the world from England, when, as a matter of fact, the best suits we ever wore, either in America or 'over here,' were made in the United States—although we didn't always know it!"

PRESENTED DIAMOND RING.

Harry R. Archbald, retiring Master of Pasadena Lodge No. 367, F. & A. M., was presented with a valuable diamond ring by the members of the lodge on Friday evening, upon his retirement from presiding officer after his year of service.

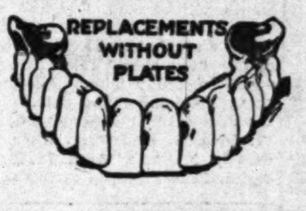
Absolutely PAINLESS Methods

Some people experience great difficulty in wearing a lower plate. This may be overcome by retaining one or more teeth which serve to hold an otherwise loosely fitting lower plate quite rigid.



You do not need to stand the inconvenience of a plate if you have a few good roots remaining. Dr. Foster's Replacement System of tooth restoration is applicable to cases where the old style bridge should not be used, restoring from one tooth to a complete set. They cannot be detected from your own perfect set in appearance or service, in fact, they are so comfortable, being permanent, that one soon forgets they did not grow there.

Extraordinary Offerings at Public Auction
OF AN Excellent Industrial Site.
ON
Tuesday, Dec. 31, at 11 a.m. Sharp.

We will sell at Public Auction, WITHOUT LIMIT OR RESERVE, to the highest bidder, one of the most excellent and practical building sites for industrial purposes to be found in Los Angeles. The property is just off Mateo street, with a frontage on Eighth street of 120 feet, north line depth of 121 feet; south line depth of 137 feet and 120 feet frontage on Lemon street. Located upon the property are five dwellings all rented, but without lease and can be removed at any time.

This property was appraised three years ago, prior to improvements, by a local guaranty company at $18,000.00, but will be sold regardless of cost or valuation. Its sale affords a wonderful opportunity to investors.

The property has Southern Pacific trackage directly adjoining. The Ford automobile plant is within three blocks of it; the Pacific Pipe Works within two blocks; the Homer Laughlin Jelly Works, Royal Canning Co. and Mosler Canning Co. within 300 feet and the property immediately adjoins that occupied by the Washington Iron Works. It is also situate directly in front of the proposed new Salt Lake Terminal, where that company has invested more than two million dollars in property, and it is within two blocks of the New Terminal Market. The property blocks Eighth st. on either side and as the city will probably open Eighth st., it may be easily seen that its value will soon increase. We know of no site in Los Angeles more ideally located for industrial purposes and none with as excellently assured speculative prospects. This sale affords an unusual opportunity to share in Los Angeles' apparent progress. Take advantage of it.

Remember the day—Tuesday, December 31st, the time, 11 a.m. Sale Positive—without limit or reserve—the highest bidder will be the lucky buyer. Take Santa Fe car at 7th and Spring and get off at Eighth and Mateo sts. HART and BALL, Auctioneers. 61534.

AMERICAN FOOD SAVES BELGIUM.

Hoover Says no Deaths Occurred from Starvation.

Children Come Through Ordeal Better than Expected.

Great Need Now is Clothing of Unlimited Supply.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Four years of German oppression brought no loss of life from starvation to Belgium and Northern France and the under-nourishment resulting from enemy occupation can be stamped out if America continues to send food.

This report from Herbert Hoover, chairman of the commission for relief in Belgium, based on a survey of the occupied territories, was made public tonight.

The survival of the peoples of Belgium and Northern France, while a quarter of the populations of other German occupied lands died of famine, was ascribed by Mr. Hoover to the work of the commission which, for four years poured food across belligerent lines.

The gratitude of these peoples to the United States, Mr. Hoover reported, "is unbounded and embarrassing." They no longer need or desire to get food through charity but owing to the systematic destruction of their textile industries must depend to a considerable extent upon the United States for clothing.

"The population is underclad," Mr. Hoover said, "and the one direction in which the Belgians are in need of charitable help is in large clothing supplies. There is no quantity of second-hand clothing that will not be needed and that will not bring gratitude into the heart of some individual Belgian."

SYSTEM BREAKS DOWN.

With the German evacuation, the system of distribution of food and clothing built up by the commission became disorganized due to breakdown in transport, Mr. Hoover found. This breaking down of the rational control in such commodities as meats, butter and other necessary supplies resulted in the whole of a very limited supply of such foodstuffs gravitating toward the wealthy through the rapid rise in prices.

Though it is possible, Mr. Hoover found, to buy almost any kind of food in Belgium, the prices preclude purchase except by the wealthy. Meat, according to the report, is $2 a pound, eggs $1 each, and butter $2.50 a pound. These prices are in contrast with an average income for more than one-half the population of less than $4 a week per family. The Food Administration established by the Belgian government, the report added, is taking care of this situation as rapidly as possible.

"An examination of the population," Mr. Hoover said, "proves that the shipments of food by the commission for relief in Belgium during the past four years have brought this people through their ordeal without irreparable damage to the national health. There exists among certain classes under-nutrition, but continued supplies of food will rapidly rectify this. There has been a considerable spread of tuberculosis as a result of this under-nutrition, but the Belgian authorities believe this can be stamped out without great loss provided adequate supplies of food arrive.

CHILDREN FARED WELL.

"The most cheering factor in the situation is the condition of the 2,000,000 Belgian children who have been the object of the utmost solicitude of the whole world during the four years of occupation. Because of the supplementary meals furnished by the relief commission and the many children's institutions which have been largely supported by the magnificent outpouring of world charity, these children have come through this period in a state of health perhaps even better than could be expected . . . Because of America's ready response to the appeal of the relief commission to save the future generations of Belgium we may be duly proud of this result."

Prior to the German evacuation, Mr. Hoover said, approximately 3,500,000 people were destitute and dependent. Through the energy of the people in getting back to work, he said, this had been reduced to 2,000,000 and within a month it was expected to decrease to not more than 1,000,000.

"My survey of the rest of Europe, the Balkan states and Poland," Mr. Hoover said, "is not complete, but sufficient evidence is at hand to show that before next harvest, relief of an unprecedented character must be extended if the remaining population is to be maintained in any semblance of health."

Christmas was carried to La Vina sanatorium, a philanthropic institution for sufferers from tuberculosis near Sierra Madre, by some famous figures in the musical world. Mrs. Carrie Jacobs-Bond, composer of "A Perfect Day" and other songs, sang for the patients, as did Harry Clifford Lott Forgery Charge Against Young Woman Transferred to Juvenile Bureau.

The case of Prudie Price, charged with forgery, was transferred to the juvenile bureau for investigation when Justice of the Peace Brown learned yesterday that the girl says she is only 14 years old. Maggie Purdy, 19 years old, is jointly charged with the Price girl with having forged three checks aggregating $30.

On the stand yesterday the Price girl said her real name was Prudie E. Shamblin, and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Shamblin of Blythe. She said she was born on December 31, 1903, at Muldron, Okla. The girl said she was married at Santa Ana recently to a man named Price and that she gave her age as 18.

TRAGEDY STILL IN FRANCE

Pictures of Happier Days are Obliterated from Child Minds; Help Needed.

BY LUCIEN N. BRUNSWIG,

Chairman Pacific Coast Division, Fatherless Children of France.

One of the things that impresses the onlooker most in France is American solicitude for the welfare of the little children whose homes have been destroyed, whose fathers have been either killed or swallowed up by the prisons of Germany, and whose mothers have been so impoverished by war as to be unable to care for them. It is beautiful to see the spirit in which American agencies have hastened to their succor, but it is the sad fact that, generous as has been our response to the needs of these little ones overseas, their necessities are still far and away beyond any measures yet taken to relieve and hold them safe.

Their condition is pitiable, for in addition to their suffering they cannot understand the why and wherefore of that condition, and on their woe is piled a heart-rending bewilderment as to why this soul-searing devastation should be visited upon them. Vast numbers of them who have been taught that only good can come out of the blue above, where the angels live, have had their faith in heaven shattered by the, to them, all too obvious fact that death has rained down upon them out of once-lovely skies, and some are actually afraid to look up, because it was from those upper reaches that the Hun sent the instruments of destruction that killed their parents and in many cases their own little playmates.

Not a few of them have themselves been forever maimed by the enginery of destruction in the hands of an invisible and cruel enemy. There are many little boys with their legs and hands blown away either by shells or by innocent-looking objects they have picked up in the street. Their little minds are filled with a background of tragedy that has well-night obliterated the pictures of happier days, and their outlook is one that in the very nature of things is filled with uncertainty. Their capacity for play, their tendency to sing, their wish to laugh, have all been cowed out of them.

Their condition, unrealized by the generous heart of America, would constitute a German victory, for it was a part and parcel of the Hun campaign to destroy, not only the France of today, but the France of tomorrow; so to terrorize where they could not kill and maim that in a possible later onslaught there would be no gallant sons and daughters of France to frustrate their vile ambition; so to break the spirit of the children of France that in these conflicts there should be no [illegible] in Spartan courage to [illegible] wall of steeled hearts against [illegible] fell designs, such as they [illegible] the men of Verdun.

RETURN OF MRS. BUSCH.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, Dec. 28.—Mrs. Lily Busch, widow of Adolphus Busch, the multi-millionaire St. Louis brewer who had his winter home in Pasadena and established the famous Busch gardens here, will arrive in Pasadena Monday afternoon from St. Louis, to spend the winter in Southern California.

Mrs. Busch will occupy her own mansion, "Ivy Wall," the Busch home on South Orange Grove avenue, which, the past week has been made ready for her occupancy.

Mrs. Busch will remain all winter, it is understood. This is her first visit to Pasadena since her husband's death. When Mr. Busch was alive it was the family custom to spend every winter season in Pasadena. In those days the Busch entourage arrived in one or more private cars and the Budweiser baron's annual arrival was an event of no small importance in the community.

One season he came in a private special train. He was one of the first men of great wealth in the United States to select Southern California as his home—a place to come to and rest and amuse himself when business did not claim him. He took an immense interest and pride in the Busch gardens, situated in the Arroyo Seco, just west of his Orange Grove-avenue home. The public has always been admitted to the gardens, which form one of the show places of the Southland. Since Mr. Busch's death, the estate has kept up the gardens just as when he was alive and every day tourists wander through its pretty lanes.

Early in the world war—long before the United States entered the conflict—Mrs. Busch went to Germany to visit. She remained until last spring. Then her difficulties began. It was reported that she was allowed to leave Germany only after considerable trouble and negotiation. She got to Switzerland.

It was reported then that, being a German by birth, Mrs. Busch might experience some difficulty about re-entering the United States, which had then been at war with Germany since the spring of 1917. She remained some time in Switzerland. Finally it was announced that she had sailed for the United States. Her ship from Europe was a West Indies liner and Mrs. Busch re-entered the United States through a Florida port. She was met there by officials of the State Department who questioned her, presumably about conditions in Germany. The interviews were evidently satisfactory to the State Department, for Mrs. Busch was then permitted to proceed to her home and her own affairs. Since her return Mrs. Busch has been spending her time at her St. Louis home and at a summer lodge the family has in the East.

Mrs. T. P. Lukens, widow of the famous Southern California reforestation advocate and naturalist, died at her home here Thursday night. Mr. Lukens died just a few months ago. Mrs. Lukens was the naturalist's second wife, the first having died years ago.

MEMORIAL PLANS.

Petitions will be circulated among Pasadena citizens, beginning in the churches tomorrow, indorsing a plan for an immediate issue of municipal bonds to build a memorial hall for Pasadena soldiers and sailors. It is stipulated that this is a sentimental undertaking and will not interfere with bond issues for the proposed municipal interurban line to Los Angeles or other civic projects.

CHRISTMAS CROWDS INCREASE FLU CASES.

CHANGED CONDITION, HOWEVER, NO GREATER THAN AUTHORITIES EXPECTED.

Expectations of the health authorities that the number of influenza cases would increase as the result of Christmas gatherings were borne out again yesterday with a further increase. Reports showed 460 cases of influenza yesterday and five cases of influenza and pneumonia. While there is an increase of over 100 compared to Friday, it is no more than was expected by the health authorities.

The record of new cases reported for the week is as follows: Saturday, 465; Friday, 345; Thursday, 307; Wednesday, 160; Tuesday, 174.

It is believed by the health authorities that a rigid enforcement of the quarantine regulations will result in bringing the number of cases down to a minimum, but this, it is believed, will not be until after the effect of the Christmas crowds has passed.

Fourteen deaths were reported yesterday, five from pneumonia, eight from influenza and pneumonia, and one from influenza.

WOMEN HEAR CHARGES.

Alleged Conditions at California School for Girls at Ventura are Discussed Here.

A meeting of about fifty club women of Los Angeles and vicinity was held yesterday to hear charges which Mrs. Nellie B. Pierce has perferred against the California School for Girls, located at Ventura. Mrs. Pierce charges that the girls have been cruelly treated at the school, and that the educational features have been subordinated to the reformatory system.

Fred Boden of the United States Department of Justice and Mrs. A. T. Gedbe, teacher in the Westgate Military Academy, and formerly supervising principal and commercial teacher in the Ventura institution, made statements before the assemblage yesterday criticising the school and what they described as its methods. The charges have been officially denied by the school authorities, and steps have been taken by the State Board of Charities and Corrections to investigate.

FOR VERNON LANDS.

Supervisors will Consider Question of Flood Control Condemnation Suits.

The Board of Supervisors will hold a conference tomorrow to determine whether the county will proceed with condemnation suits for the acquirement of land for flood control work at Vernon. Special Counsel Burnell has informed the board that the courts have indicated no more continuances will be granted. The trial has been set for January 16. In the hope of an adjustment of prices, the cases have been continued from time to time.

It is alleged that large values have been put on land wanted by the county, particularly in the river bed, because the flood control work will prevent any more sand being sold from the river bed.

YANKS HAVE STRANGE CHRISTMAS IN RUSSIA.

BUT NOWHERE IN HUTS OR VILLAGES HAS GLOOM AN ABIDING PLACE.

By Frazier Hunt.

[ATLANTIC CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RAILROAD FRONT (Northern Russia, Christmas Day) (via Archangel, via Paris) Dec. 27.—No United States soldiers in the whole history of American arms ever spent a stranger or more unreal Christmas than these boys of the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth Regiment, who are celebrating today in Northern Russia, thousands of miles away from home.

In numberless tiny native outpost villages, tucked away on river banks or hidden in great forests or squatting along this single railroad line, American boys are trying to bring the American Christmas to Russia.

A white Christmas—tall pines and firs glisten and sparkle under the snow blankets! In the soldiers' billets, in friendly, grateful peasant houses, in thick-walled, bullet-proof blockhouses, these boys are singing American songs, telling of other gentler Christmases and trying not to be too lonesome.

Now and then some soldier clad in Arctic boots, great sheep-lined overcoat and fur cap comes from standing guard into the gathering of his comrades and friendly natives clustered around a glowing stove. These are cheery, friendly places and gloom has nowhere a place at these firesides.

Through the American Red Cross every American soldier was given this morning a real Christmas stocking, packed with delicacies and smokes. In addition, an appropriation made by the Red Cross gave 50 cents to each man to purchase extras for his Christmas dinner, and the army, as well, gave special food. So everywhere along the 400 miles of front there are great dinners with delicious native game birds and Russian dishes.

Some of the army commanders and high officials of the American Embassy came out from Archangel yesterday so as to be with the soldiers along the front today. Dewitt C. Poole, acting American Ambassador, is touring this railroad front, addressing the soldiers and carrying a message that America and President Wilson have not forgotten them and on this Christmas the people back home are thinking of them.

A special Christmas number of the soldiers' paper here, the American Sentinel, reached the front this morning and was like a breath of spring. This little four-page sheet, established a few weeks ago, has had a tremendous and beneficial effect on the morale and good spirits of the American soldier. Few letters and no papers ever reach these outposts, and this American soldiers' sheet is supplying the need. American Red Cross Captain Roger Lewis established and is editing the paper, giving his whole time to the enterprise. Today's Christmas number was the most welcome Christmas gift of all.

At field headquarters the American engineers working in the recently-won territory, rushed work on the recreation hall, completed it yesterday and saw it inaugurated at midnight with a Christmas mass said by a French chaplain. Today the same hall was used for an American moving picture performance arranged by the Y.M.C.A.

OTIS INSTITUTE TO BE BIG FACTOR IN ART LIFE.

Notable Expansion of County School Planned for the New Year; Inquiries Show Opportunities will be Sought by St dents Throughout United States; Maintenance Quest on Soon to be Arranged.

With the advent of the new year, indications point to a notable development in the work of the Otis Art Institute of the Los Angeles County Museum of History, Science and Art, for which broad foundations already have been laid. The leaders in this work predict that within a comparatively short time the institute will become one of the big factors in the art life of the Southwest. They are in receipt of inquiries regarding its opportunities from art students in all parts of the United States.

The property composing the Otis Art Institute was formerly known as "The Bivouac," the Los Angeles home of the late Gen. Harrison Gray Otis. It is located on Wilshire boulevard, at the westerly end of Westlake Park, and it has long been considered one of the beauty-spots of that portion of the city. Shortly before his death, in 1917, Gen. Otis presented "The Bivouac" property to the county of Los Angeles, to be used for the purpose of advancing art in the West. His aims were broad and comprehensive, and they included the fostering of the fine arts, applied arts and industrial arts. The gift was accepted with full appreciation by the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles county, who at that time declared their purpose to carry out the expressed wishes of Gen Otis.

The Board of Supervisors, in consultation with the Board of Governors of the Museum of History, Science and Art, came to the conclusion that the most effective way of realizing the intention of Gen. Otis was by the establishment and maintenance of a thorough art school, and steps were taken toward this end. The beautiful residence, and its adjacent buildings, were submitted to interior changes which made it more convenient for art school work, and provision was made for the maintenance of exhibition rooms in which the best work of California artists, as well as the work of students, showing their progress, might be displayed. A corps of talented instructors was organized, and finally the art school came into actual existence.

BY CONTRIBUTIONS.

Because a legal question had arisen as to the ability of the Board of Supervisors to expend county money in the maintenance of a school of fine and applied arts, it was finally decided to maintain the school for one year through the contributions of citizens. In all probability, any remedial legislation required to remove the doubt as to the board's legal powers in regard to maintenance will be enacted by action of the States Legislature this winter.

The school opened its class work on September 30, with an enrollment of art students not only from California, but from other States of the Union as well. It was just getting into full swing when the epidemic of influenza caused the issuance of orders by the health authorities which closed school sessions, but the work accomplished in even that short period was an augury of earnest purpose on the part of faculty and students to make the most of the great advantages at hand.

Since the lifting of the influenza ban, arrangements have been made for the taking up of art work on all the lines provided, immediately after the Christmas holidays, and during the past two weeks the mail of the managing director has daily brought applications for admission or inquiries regarding the courses offered.

ATTRACTIVE SETTING.

The Otis Art Institute not only occupies the fourteen rooms provided by "The Bivouac" itself, but studios have been fitted up in the building at the northerly end of the property. Back of the main building is the structure occupied by the California Art Club, composed of students of art in many branches. The group of buildings has as its setting grounds that are adorned with semi-tropical flowers, shrubs and trees, and the site overlooks some of the most beautiful portions of Westlake Park.

In the main building the first floor is occupied by business and secretary's offices, reception hall, exhibition rooms and modeling rooms. The second floor has three fine studios, one for still life work, one for work from living models and one for plastic work and applied art work. Paintings of widely known artists hang on the walls, and statuary is placed at points of vantage.

C. P. Townsley is the managing director. He was a pupil of the Julien and Delecluse academies in Paris and of William M. Chase in New York. He is a member of the Salmagundi Club of New York, of the California Art Club, organized and directed for many years Chase European classes, was director and instructor in the London, Eng., School of Art, 1905-1910; Carmel Summer School of Art, 1915-16, and the Stickney Memorial School of Art, Pasadena, 1914-18.

Other members of the faculty are E. Roscoe Shrader, instructor in drawing, illustration, composition and lecturer on anatomy, pupil of the Art Institute, Chicago, and of Howard Pyle, Wilmington, Del.; Minnie Gertrude Rackle, instructor in design and applied arts and lecturer on perspective, graduate of the Massachusetts Normal Art School, Boston; Karl Rydingsvard, instructor in art wood carving, graduate of the Technical School of Stockholm, Sweden, and who has executed commissions for some of the most notable buildings, public and private, in America; Harry Nielsen, supervisor of interior decoration, pupil of the Art Institute, Chicago; Amelia M. Goldsworthy, instructor in the teachers' art course, director of the art department of the Western State Normal School of Kalamazoo, Mich., and one of the best known educators of the country, who has leave of absence from her school for one year.

The aim of the school is to provide students with a sound technical training in the various branches of the fine and applied arts, to teach them how to put this training to practical use in the creation of works of art, to develop their individuality and to encourage them to seek the highest degree of artistic excellence. The school offers courses of instruction in drawing and painting, illustration, design and applied arts, and certificates will be awarded to students who have satisfactorily completed the course.

The teachers' art course provides for sessions of Saturday morning classes particularly planned to meet the needs of the grade teacher and normal student who are interested in the study of art for self-development or in preparation for teaching, and students are admitted without previous training in art. Special classes in design are also held on Saturday mornings.

The courses in drawing and painting are planned to prepare students to take up professional work or portrait, still life, landscape and decorative painting. The illustration courses prepare the student to take up the work professionally of illustration—book, magazine, newspaper and commercial work, for for which there is a constantly increasing demand. The courses in design and applied arts include principles of good design, study of historic ornament, color theory, lettering, work in the crafts, design, pottery, metal working and jewelry, textile decoration and book binding.

The original property of the Bivouac was expanded from time to time, during its occupation by Gen. Otis as his residence, until it now embraces 150 feet frontage on Wilshire boulevard by 267½ feet on Park View avenue. Improvements in excess of $60,000 have been made on the property, and it has been appraised at a conservative valuation of $150,000.

THE PROPOSED SCOPE.

In his statement to the Board of Supervisors, when Gen. Otis presented this splendid gift to Los Angeles county, he outlined the general scope of the work, which he hoped would be undertaken by the institution thus created for public use, as follows:

(1.) Music, painting and sculpture.

(2.) The legitimate drama, grand opera and histrionic art.

(3.) Schools for the study of the sciences, history, advanced literature and the languages.

(4.) Popular lectures on high current topics, including city, State and national problems.

(5.) Song, elocution, readings recitals and classic dancing.

(6.) The work of collecting modern artistic prints in black, sepia and tints, and also rare old steel engravings

(7.) Keramics or the plastic arts.

(8.) Expert instruction in color photography, photo-engraving and rotogravure; besides, possibly, practical training in illuminated printing and art binding.

The donor explained his wish to be that some or all of these pursuits, and also the fostering of such other forms of fine arts are may be introduced from time to time, shall receive the special consideration of the first board of directors. Another purpose is to give kindly encouragement to meritorious California artists.

Worthy art students of demonstrated talents will be encouraged by the manager of the Otis Art Institute, the design and purpose being to make the rare spot a populart art resort and social center, where art-loan exhibits can be successfully held; where artists in various lines may freely congregate where objects of art may be collected and acquired through loans, gifts and exchanges, and also by purchase when funds are available; and where regular entertainments, monthly or otherwise, may be given of a musical, dramatic, literary, oratorical, conversational or festive nature.

DEATHS SEVER LEGAL KNOTS.

Dramatic Climax to Troubles of Old Agoure Family.

Gunplay and Suicide Follow Annulment Action.

Wife of Heir, Accused in the Suit, Kills Herself.

A domestic knot in which two prominent Spanish families were tangled has been cut with the death of the two women concerned—Mrs. Marie Silves by influenza two weeks ago, and Mrs. Florence Agoure by poison, self-administered yesterday.

Mrs. Agoure took poison at the Calabasas ranch of her husband, Lester P. Agoure, one of the heirs to the estate of the late Pierre Agoure, and who filed suit the day before Christmas for annulment of his marriage with her. She died on the way to the Receiving Hospital.

Mr. Agoure said in his suit for annulment that his wife had not been divorced from her previous husband, Fidel Silves, and that she gave her maiden name when he married her, and had not told him of a prior alliance. He married her in June of this year, she giving her maiden name, Camilla Androtti and her age as 22 years, he alleged.

Up to a month ago he suspected nothing, but at that time she was attacked by Spanish influenza and while she was at the Good Samaritan Hospital he learned of the previous marriage with Silves, and also that her age was 29 years.

Mrs. Marie Silves, nee Gonzales, the wife of Fidel Silves, who believed he was actually divorced from Mrs. Agoure, contracted Spanish influenza about the same time, and died of the malady two weeks ago, leaving an infant child. With the death of Mrs. Agoure, Mr. Silves is actually a widower two times within a fortnight.

ASKS ANNULMENT.

When Mrs. Agoure learned of his wife's previous marriage, he told her of his finding, and stated that he would file suit in the Superior Court for annulment of their marriage. This was Monday, and Mrs. Agoure left the Good Samaritan Hospital at once, against the wishes of her physician, returning to her apartments at No. 1604 West Pico street.

Private Detectives Frank Edmundson and W. W. Swann, working for Mr. Agoure, verified his wife's previous marriage, and also investigated the circumstances surrounding her death. According to them, Mrs. Agoure dressed and left her apartment Friday during the absence of her nurse, Mrs. Lottie Atchison.

The nurse reported this to Mr. Agoure, who was visiting his mother at No. 2955 South Western avenue. Agoure and his brother-in-law, Sergt. Grove T. Vail, on furlough from a Texas camp, drove at once to the 15,000-acre cattle ranch belonging to Agoure and situated nine miles beyond Calabasas.

Meanwhile, at the ranch, the chef, Fred Ramirez, heard a noise in the house, and on investigation found Mrs. Agoure hiding in a closet. It is thought that she rented an automobile to make the trip from the Pico-street apartment to the Calabasas ranch.

When Mr. Agoure and his brother-in-law arrived, Mrs. Agoure told her husband she wished to see him alone on important business. Sergt. Vail saw that she had a gun in her possession, however, and after a short struggle took this away from her.

TAKES POISON.

The woman became calm after she had been disarmed, and the party retired for the night. Later Mr. Agoure was roused when his wife left the room, and in a few moments she returned and announced that she had taken bichloride of mercury. She was rushed to Los Angeles, but died before she could be taken to the hospital.

Assistant Coroner Williams announced yesterday that no inquest would be held and that a certificate of suicidal death would be signed by Coroner Hartwell. The body of the woman was taken to the parlors of Cunningham and O'Connor, where up to late today no funeral arrangements had been completed.

In Mr. Agoure's suit for annulment he declared that his wife had married Fidel Silves, an El Monte rancher, in 1907, and left him five years later. She told him that she had obtained a divorce, and he, believing her, married again. Her marriage to Agoure took place but a few months ago.

Mrs. Agoure was a member of the Androtti family at Montebello, that came to California in its early settler days and settled near the old mission. Her husband is a member of a well-known French family that has extensive holdings in Los Angeles and vicinity.

His father, Pierre Agoure, died in 1914, leaving an estate worth more than $500,000. His death was caused by formaldehyde poisoning, which he took in mistake for medicine. The settlement of his estate was marked by sensational charges filed by John Lapique, who claimed to be the elder Agoure's partner. The charges fell flat in court, however.

WAR VETERAN DEAD.

William Moore Williams Had Been a Resident of This City for Six Years.

In the death of William Moore Williams at No. 1439 Norton avenue, another of the veterans here of the Civil War has passed. Mr. Williams was born in Milwaukee, Wis., in 1846. At the beginning of the war he enlisted in Co. B, First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and, as sergeant, served in that company during the entire war. At the close of the war, he, with Gen. Arthur MacArthur and Capt. Charles King, the three youngest soldiers from Wisconsin, was offered a scholarship at West Point. Six years ago the family moved to Los Angeles. He was a comrade of the late Sidney Butler, of this city.

Mr. Williams is survived by a widow, Mary Rawson Williams, to whom he was married in 1869, and by six children and six grandchildren. Two brothers, T. D. Williams of Ajo, Ariz., and Milton Williams of St. Joe, Idaho, and one sister, Mrs. Emma Wood of Chicago, [illegible] on Williams of this city is a son.

STAGE SET FOR ROSE FETE.

Pasadena's Victory Tournament will be Big New Year's Day Event.

Frank M. Hunter, grand marshal of Pasadena's Victory Tournament of Roses parade, which is expected to draw thousands to the Crown City on New Year's Day, announced yesterday that the floral pageant will start promptly at 10:45 o'clock next Wednesday morning.

The present will be the thirtieth annual tournament, and everything is ready except the float decorations. The supporting framework of all the entries is completed, but the perishable flowers used in creating the wonderful decorative schemes must of necessity be put in place the night before the pageant, in order that they may retain their freshness. Nothing but natural flowers and greenery are allowed.

The parade will form on South Orange Grove avenue and side streets, and from Orange Grove avenue will proceed east on Colorado street to Fair Oaks avenue, then will go south on Fair Oaks to Dayton street, east to Raymond avenue, north to Colorado street, west to Fair Oaks, north to Holly, east to Raymond, south to Colorado, east to Wilson avenue, and then south to Tournament Park.

The football game between the Great Lakes Naval Reserves and the Mare Island Marines will begin at the park promptly at 2 o'clock. The annual rose tournament ball will start at Hotel Maryland at 9 o'clock New Year's night.

Decorating the Pasadena streets in order that the city may look its best when the New Year's Day crowds arrive, began last week. Red, white and blue constitute the color scheme. From every cross wire over the street American flags and bunting in the national colors will be hung. The central feature on each wire will be a victory shield in red, white and blue.

The Pacific Electric Railway is arranging to run cars on two-minute schedules over the short line, Oak Knoll line and Garvanza-South Pasadena line. More and more persons visit the tournament in automobiles every year, but the number coming by street car shows no signs of falling off. In all probability a new record will be established in the matter of attendance.

Young women and girls of Pasadena have played an important part in providing flowers for decorative purposes, and in furnishing ideas for float designs. A number of handsome silver trophies are this year offered winners in the automobile division. Miss Blanche Farmer will not only drive her own car in this division, but she will decorate it with her own hands, using flowers she has grown in her own garden. She will use nothing but red and white roses. It is something of an accomplishment to have all one's rose bushes blooming the latter part of December, but Miss Farmer has been able to do it by getting pointers from gardeners at the big resort hotels, who plan to have the greatest wealth of floral bloom around the holiday season, when the tourist influx is on in earnest.

The Christian Science Monitor free rest tent, which is always maintained for the accommodation of the city's guests will have enlarged capacity for 1919. The location of the tent will be one-half block west of Hotel Maryland, on East Colorado street. The tent will be comfortably furnished and will afford a quiet resting place for both men and women. Everyone will be welcome, and there will be no charges whatever.

TO SHOOT FOR HUN HELMET

A helmet taken from a German machine gunner will be the trophy shot for on New Year's Day by marksmen of the Beverly Hills Rifle and Revolver Club. The helmet has just been received by Sidney C. Rowe of the club from First Lieutenant S. A. Glasswell, now in France, formerly an active member of the Beverly Hills organization.

Lieut. Glasswell volunteered shortly after this country entered the war and was commissioned at the officers' training camp at the Presidio. He was assigned to a machine-gun corps in France and is now an instructor there.

In his letter to Mr. Rowe, transmitting the trophy, Lieut. Glasswell writes:

"Am sending a Boche helmet to the rifle club as I have an idea it would make a fairly good trophy to shoot for. I leave it to you to arrange any sort of match you may desire. I happened to be engaged in the last battles of the war and came through without a scratch, but I will say this much with regard to the wearer of the helmet that the man who wore it had absolutely no further use for it. I left him where he lay, minus this bonnet. The mud of France is still on it."

Lieut. Glasswell's opinion of the Germans is thus expressed in a letter dated November 24:

"I am sorry I am not among the first army of occupation, as I would have liked to see with my own eyes the home of this animal we have been fighting. If it is half as dirty as the beasts we captured, it will need a lot of cleaning. This Boche creature had not a single drop of sporting blood in his veins, nothing of gentlemanly instincts lurks in their bodies, and the tales you have heard of the things they have done are all true. Having done them, they deserve little consideration at anybody's hands."

MASQUE BALL TO DAZZLE.

Final plans for the big Ad masque ball at Shrine Auditorium on New Year's Eve were completed at a meeting yesterday of the advertising men. The doors of the auditorium will be open promptly at 7:30 and at 9 o'clock sharp the grand march is scheduled. Already 1500 entries have been received for the grand march, and each will be costumed to represent some advertising firm, slogan or product. The Gold Dust Twins, the Dutch Cleanser Maid, the Cream of Wheat familiar smile and all of the other favorites of the magazine and newspaper pages will be seen rioting in old-fashioned New Year's style.

The Advertising Club has invited everybody to join in this New Year's celebration, and for those who do not want to dance, thousands of good seats are available in the gallery. All that is required is a ticket, and these can be obtained at the Advertising Club office or B. H. Dyas & Co. tomorrow or Tuesday, or at the box office New Year's Eve. Music will be provided by a sixteen-piece jazz band.

Promptly at two minutes past 12 there will be a New Year's wedding. At 12 o'clock the chimes will announce the entry of the couple, and dancing girls of the Zillah Ernestine Withrow Ballet, classic dancers, will add a touch of orientalism. The bride will be Miss Louise Gertrude Gorham of No. 1316 Girard street, grand-daughter of Col. Eddy, the founder and builder of Angel's Flight. The groom is Lewis Earl Jones from the Submarine Base at San Pedro. Judge Harlan Palmer will officiate for the ceremony.

Many girls with moving-picture aspirations are interested in the announcement of the Advertising Club that the three prettiest girls attending the Ad masque ball, selected by a committee composed of motion-picture directors, will be heralded as new motion-picture queens, and engaged by three of the large producing studios. Anybody can enter this contest providing they are at the Ad masque ball, where the selections will be made.

WILLS FRIEND ESTATE IN SEVENTEEN WORDS.

Seventeen words, written on a statement of a local hotel, constitutes the holographic will of Edward S. Cartwright, in disposing of his $2000 estate, according to papers filed yesterday for probate of the will.

In these few words, Mr. Cartwright, who died on December 18, made Mrs. A. M. Debban, a friend, the beneficiary and left nothing to his widow, Mrs. Jessie Cartwright of No. 3520 Whitehouse place, this city. The will was written at a time that Mr. Cartwright was on his death bed. He died three days after writing it. According to Frank C. Collier, attorney for D. M. Thomson, named as executor, Mrs. Cartwright was not mentioned in the will because of divorce proceedings that were pending.

TWENTY MILLIONS FOR BUILDING.

More than Double Past Year's Record is Predicted by Supt. Backus; Seven Millions in Sewer Jobs and Vast Amount of Street Work Ahead.

Predicting that $20,000,000 worth of new building will be erected in Los Angeles during the coming year, Chief Building Inspector Backus yesterday said conditions could hardly be brighter for unprecedented prosperity in Southern California. His annual report showed that buildings costing $8,700,000 were erected here during the year just closing.

In addition to building operations millions of dollars will be spent in the improvement of streets, according to the Board of Public Works. Yesterday President Handley of that department said that, since the government has lifted the ban on public improvements, the city is preparing to rush work upon sewers and streets, the total cost of which will be approximately $7,000,000.

The Board of Public Works sent a formal communication to the Council urging that steps be taken at once for the improvement of Washington street from Arlington street to the city limits, Pico street from Queen Anne place to the city limits, Western avenue from Slauson avenue to Manchester avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-third street from Figueroa street to Vermont avenue.

According to Inspector Backus, building operations in 1918 were divided as follows:

January, $648,992; February, $765,630; March, $816,949; April, $759,314; May, $1,305,846; June, $778,680; July, $820,480; August, $763,579; September, $724,091; October, $173,424; November, $519,008; December, $537,593.

In 1917 building operations totalled $16,000,000 and comparison with the past year's total shows one of the effects of the war upon local activities.

CAR SUPPLY AMPLE TO MEET ALL NEEDS.

THROUGH SERVICE TO EASTERN CITIES EXTENDED. MEAL PLAN APPROVED.

In connection with the efficient handling of less than carload freight, the Sailing Day Committee of the Central Western Region is giving considerable attention to the loading of cars to avoid transfers and has already established through cars from San Francisco to New York and from Ogden and Salt Lake City to Chicago. The committee expects shortly to have through cars from California points to Chicago.

Announcement of this method of expediting freight is made in the November report of Regional Director Hale Holden to Director-General McAdoo, made public by Coast Director William Sproule.

Unusually satisfactory traffic conditions for this period of the year are reported by Regional Director Holden. The car supply is described as "ample to meet all requirements."

Loading of live stock increased 8643 cars, or 12.3 per cent. as compared with November last year. Further extensions of the sailing day plan are reported. The total saving achieved under this method has reached a point where 4372 cars are being made available to the public weekly over and above what would have been available without the plan.

Very little California fruit in trainload lots moves at this season of the year. Only twenty special trains were operated with a total of 681 acres.

The opening of consolidated ticket offices at San Francisco and Los Angeles completes the administration's plans in this respect for the Central Western Region.

The change from a la carte to table d'hote meals on the dining car service is declared to have met with general approval. The Southern Pacific, for instance, in October served 81,880 table d'hote meals and during that time received but four complaints from passengers who stated that they preferred the a la carte service.

Readjustment of Western Pacific and Southern Pacific service in Nevada and California has resulted in an annual saving in passenger train mileage of 71,175 miles.

BOLSHEVISM VERSUS LOBSTERS.

Russian Crustacean-Hunters of Unique Village Near Santa Monica Discover Sovereign Panacea for World Unrest—What Is It? Work.

The occupy less than a third of village. There are several families and the rest are to a few years ago the place was commonly known as the Japanese fishing village. About two years ago the Russians began moving in. But their number, according to A. R. Miller, station master, land agent, and chief mogul of the settlement, has not increased in more than a year. A slight break in the "building line," a space of about ten feet, marks the international line of the village. The southern end of the street is Russian. There is no mistaking it, and one would have no trouble to find the line of demarkation even without the dividing space. There is more paint on the houses, more windows in the buildings, more children and fewer whiskers on the Japanese side. Also more women. Most of the Japanese fishermen have their families, and live the year round in the village. The Russians, on the other hand drift in and out with the different fishing seasons.

Mr. Miller holds sway from the combination railway-express station and general store over which he presides. Boxes upon boxes of fish hooks—shiny little affairs, very business-like looking—lines and other professional fishing supplies line his office. The office and store are built on the pier, and from his reclining chair Mr. Miller can see the entire village stretching with the road.

NO BOLSHEVIKI.

"Bolsheviki?" he repeated with a surprising note in his voice when asked where they might be found. "Why, there's no such a thing here. They are too busy catching lobsters. These Russians are hard working people, and the lobster season is in full swing," he added.

A bronzed individual, with blond drooping mustache and not a vestige of whiskers, nooded. He was standing in front of the cigarette counter, awaiting his package. Nothing but the mustache—or rather its careless droop, betrayed the fact that he was a fisherman. He was dressed in street shoes, well-pressed trousers, shirt and soft collar and a gray sweater and hat.

"No, no Bolsheviki here," he agreed with Miller. "Not for a while."

"Sure," Miller spoke up. "Look at Lee," pointing at the mustached one. "He used to be a Bolsheviki, eh, Lee? But he came back with good loads of lobster several times, and now he's no longer a Bolsheviki!"

Lee Lamar smiled. "Oh, that's just joke," he hastened to explain. "No Bolsheviki here; too busy working."

Lamar is a Russian, but has been in the United States for more than fifteen years, and has "learned a few things," including driving a Ford, he says. He owns three boats, shaves three times a day, and when well comes in with good boatloads of lobster.

But while he is not a typical Russian fisherman, he was willing to talk about his fellow-countrymen, especially when asked about them in his native tongue.

"Noo, chto," he began with a characteristic shrug of a Russian, "we're all fishermen. Lobster's everything now. We go out, stay three days, maybe two, and come back and sell lobster. Company men, they buy right here, put in boxes and send to city. Make money, not much. Work hard and go to town every week." Lamar is somewhat of a capitalist. He owns three boats. Two of them have engines in them, and the third one is in pretty good shape, too, he says. To be sure, one of the engines, a rather prehistoric affair, is covered with sand and reflected in several inches of water on the bottom of the boat, but iron is iron," says Lamar. "I'll clean up with gasoline and rag, and 'skoro' boat go all right." At the time of writing Lamar is incapacitated for fishing—has "fish poison" in his right hand, but expects to be well in a few days.

"There comes boat with more lobsters," Lamar pointed out, "and I go see what they bring." He started to walk to the end of the pier, where a large shed for hoisting the catch from the boats, sorting and packing it, has been built.

While Lamar was talking in Russian, Watson, becoming tired of it and failing to find any excitement in a smooth-shaven man in a Russian village, strayed away down the beach. As Lamar started up the pier there was a little commotion near a group of beached boats, and Watson, camera in hand, came into prominence. He was trying to photograph two men, both considerably bewhiskered and coming closer to what an average estimation of a real Bolshevik should be.

The two men, however, did not wish to be photographed. So they just rolled over and went on reading. The big white bulldog with them showed a lively interest in the photographer, which probably explained why Watson lost his.

The older one of the two men was an interesting person—one could tell that at a glance. About six feet tall, white haired, distinguished looking and clad only in gray bathing trunks, he gave me just one glance, and went on reading his thick book. His companion did not even waste a glance. He never moved. We later learned the two are known as "mystery men" among the fishermen. They always loll on the beach, with as little on as possible, eat fruits and nuts—one Russian fisherman swore he saw them eating kelp and seaweed—and "always read strange books."

"Zdravstvooyte!"

On hearing the salutation in the Russian, the Mystery Man gave a quick look over his shoulder, tilting his head into an angle that gave him the most resemblance to George Bernard Shaw.

"Zdravstvooyte," he mumbled, and went on reading. An intrusion into one's privacy, even in the native language, was not to be encouraged. The only manifestation of life from Mystery Man No. 2 was the fact that he shifted from the left to the right elbow and turned over a new page, carefully blowing away the few grains of sand scooped up in the turning.

It's hard to realize what a trite subject for conversation the weather is until you try it in a foreign language. I ventured the opinion that it was a fine day. The almost-naked G.B.S.—the resemblance to Shaw was there—replied, also in the sharp-cut Russian, that it was rather obvious it was a fine day, considering there was no wind, and quite warm and the sun shone. Only he did not use so many words. "Da, kanetchno,"—"Yes, of course," he said, but he had a way of saying a lot with a few words, that tall Russian.

It was quite evident that something stronger than weather had to be used to jar that man into interest. So I asked him about Bolsheviki in Port Los Angeles. The ruse worked. "How are you going to tell if a man is a Bolshevik? It isn't written on his forehead," he opined and went on reading. His man Friday again shifted an elbow.

"Are there many Bousheviki here?"

The element of surprise wore off, and Mystery No. 1 refused to be taken unaware. He made a few curt remarks about every man minding his own business, about the cities like Los Angeles and other large centers of population being the breeding nests for Bolsheviki and not a place where men earned their bread by the sweat of their brows, about spying reporters and the price of lobsters. He could not resist the temptation to declare that the fishermen are being exploited, as is everyone else. The interview came to an abrupt end when Watson snapped a picture. It was time to go.

"There's at least one Bolshevik there" I told Lamar when I met him in the fish shed, but he said, "No," and tapped his forehead. "That man and his friend, they funny. Go naked all the time, eat no meat or fish, and they are not fishermen. Not even Bolsheviki, I think. Just read religious books and other funny books. Not Bolsheviki and not fishermen," and with that dismissed the subject. From the pier we could see the two mystery men close their books and start up the beach on a dog trot, the white bulldog a little ahead of them. "They have white cat, too," Lamar said, and led the way into the large room alive with Russians, lobsters and the car crew of an express car that was standing alongside the shed waiting for a load of lobsters.

A GOOD CATCH.

The catch was about 350 pounds. Three Russians spent two and a half days at sea to get it. They stood and watched the catch as it was being weighed and put into boxes. The squirming lobsters were put into three long boxes, and in less than an hour were on their way to the city.

The present wholesale price is 17 cents a pound. The men deal with buyers who come out every day and take all the lobsters, and ship them to the city. Every month the bills are paid. Mr. Miller handles all the freight, which is shipped by the American Railway Express, formerly the Wells Fargo. The Russians are not the only ones, of course, and a greater percentage of business done on the pier is from the Japanese. Mr. Miller estimates that an average of 95 tons of fish and lobsters a month is shipped from the pier.

In the fish shed we had a chance to hear a good definition of a Bolshevik. It came from a very much bewhispered, solidly built Muscovite. He is a retired fisherman, present on that day merely as a spectator. Three years ago he established his fame by getting a 375-pound "jew fish" with a No 1 hook. Also, he managed to save enough money to buy a ranch near Oceanside, they say, and become prosperous and religous. He is said to be the leader of his clan, and he certainly looks it.

"These fellows are looking for Belsheviki," Lamar said, pointing toward us.

"ALL BOLSHEVIKI."

"Well, they haven't far to look. We are all Bolsheviki," he started to explain, in Russian. "Bolshe," he went on to say, "means more, and from the day of our birth, we all are yelling for more of everything, so we all are Bolsheviki."

"But, honestly," he said, with a touch of confidence, "you need not worry about Bolsheviki. Not here, anyhow. There men are too busy catching lobsters to be bothered with soviets and sorrows. And the lobster season will last four weeks longer."

WATCH PRESENTED TO SECRETARY DAVISON.

"SHOCK ABSORBER" OF LIBERTY FAIR IS THANKED BY HIS ASSOCIATES.

Just as the last books were closed at Exposition Park, in connection with the business of the California Liberty Fair on Friday, F. B. Davison, secretary of the Sixth District Agricultural Association, was presented with a handsome gold watch by his associates.

During the days when the prospects for holding the fair were most gloomy Secretary Davison was given much credit for keeping things going. He dropped the larger part of his work with the Sixth District Agricultural Association and served the fair as secretary without extra pay.

It was Secretary Davison who made the California Liberty Fair possible. Two years ago he believed such a fair possible, and last year went to Sacramento, where an appropriation was secured for it.

Dr. C. K. Douglas made the presentation on behalf of associates of Mr. Davison, saying:

"We present you with this watch because of your untiring efforts to make this fair a success. You have always been willing to be our shock-absorber and you have always shown a desire to do the hard work. Your door was never closed no matter how busy you were and you never at any time showed anything but kindness to those who came to inquire and to those who were puzzled.

"Accept this watch as a token of our appreciation of your worth. We wish to extend to you our congratulations and may the tick of this watch ever remind you of the hearts of those who have loved to be associated with you in the work of making this fair a possibility. May you ever remember the appreciation of the directors and workers who have felt that your guiding hand has been on the balance wheel at all times." [Applause.] Mr. Davison made a suitable response.

SERVICES FOR LAWYER.

Funeral services for the late Darius S. Reese, who came here last July from St. Paul, Minn., to engage in the practice of law, will be held tomorrow at the parlors of Booth & Fitch, Twelfth and Hope streets. For eight years Mr. Reese had been clerk of the Supreme Court of Minnesota. He was unmarried.

STILL STRIKING. The war may be over, but a number of the unions affiliated with the shipbuilding trades have not yet heard of it. As late as last Friday one hundred and fifty riveters in a Chicago shipbuilding plant struck for a 40-per-cent. increase in wages. Striking, like drinking, is a habit easily acquired and difficult to break.

OUT OF HIS SPHERE. Now comes a New York University economist with the brilliant suggestion that the country make a bonfire of all outstanding Liberty Bonds to save the people the travail of paying them off. He is plainly misplaced, for he belongs not to a republic, but to a Bolshevist democracy. Lenine has need of him and the Federal authorities should arrange to deliver him over to the Bolsheviki without further delay.

DISGRACED THEM ALL. History abounds in instances where insignificant persons disgraced the uniforms they wore. There have been few such in our own country, that of Benedict Arnold is the most conspicuous. But all the records have been broken by the German ex-Kaiser. When the reds started their pillage of the royal apartments in Berlin they found 600 uniforms in the imperial wardrobe, and by his cowardly flight after a treacherous reign the ex-Kaiser has disgraced them all.

TRUE TO FORM. The American Minister at Bucharest expressed surprise and indignation at discovering, on his return to the legation, that more than $100,000 worth of valuable goods there had been stolen during his absence. But we should have been vastly more surprised, and perhaps disappointed as well, if he had found the property intact after the Hun occupation. We have come to regard the Huns as thieving brutes; we expect them to pillage where opportunity offers; and we expect to force them to make adequate restorations. In pillaging the American legation at Bucharest they were simply running true to form.

BOLSHEVIST JUSTICE. Liberty has never existed in civilized society outside the law and any forward movement that tends to weaken authority is doomed in advance to failure. Friday's cables from Berlin revealed that the Bolshevist forces had invaded the law courts, turned out the judges and were cleaning up the calendar in true Bolshevist style by condemning to death all who possessed property worth seizing and turning the felons free. The only consolation that a believer in law and order can draw from such maladministration of justice is in recalling the adage, "Every people gets the kind of government it deserves." Possibly Bolshevist justice is not far removed from German justice, after all.

ONLY LOAFERS UNEMPLOYED. There seems to be a great deal of energy wasted over the solution of the problem of industrial unemployment in the United States. It is difficult to imagine how that problem can become acute as long as there are more idle acres and idle forges than idle men. The production of California was not more than half what it might have been this year if man power had been available. The world is underfed; countless millions are clamoring for food. While that demand exists there will be places for everyone willing to engage in manual labor. There was never so great a demand for American raw materials, and while that demand continues there will be employment for every willing agricultural worker. There will not be overcrowding in the ranks of production when the boys come home; the only waiting lists will be for the sinecures. The demand for labor will be almost as great during the early reconstruction period as when the fighting was hottest.

ANOTHER LOST ART. There are phases of the income tax that surpass the understanding. The experience of two firms was cited in a recent Congressional debate. One firm had made a profit of $50,000 in three years; the other had lost more than $200,000 during the same period; and the firm that lost $200,000 was forced to pay a greater tax on supposed profits than the concern which had actually cleared $50,000. Here is the way the law works; a firm is charged a tax on its profits whenever profits occur, but there are no rebates when one good year comes at the end of three bad ones. In the case cited a firm lost $260,000 in two years and made back $60,000 in the third; it was forced to turn $10,000 of the profits over to the government and to pocket its losses. And the firm that actually cleared $50,000 in three years only had to pay $1250 in tax for all that time because its yearly profits were so small. Equity in taxation has evidently become a lost art.

THE CONQUERED RHINE.

IF Herr Hohenzollern, who was once a mighty Kaiser, an all-highest and a king seventeen times over, not to speak of many other things that he was and that he thought he was, could take a walk down the Rhine, just now, he would hire a poet to revise the words of his national anthem.

The Rhine has been conquered by American doughboys smiling into the hearts of little children.

> "Dear Fatherland, no danger thine, > Firm stand thy sons to watch the Rhine," said the song. They watch it still, but through wondering eyes. They do not watch over the sights of guns, nor from the battlements of fortresses. They watch it in the possession of American soldiers who came across 3000 miles of green water to take the Rhine, which they said they would do, and which they have done.

An accredited correspondent of this newspaper on the ground tells an eloquent story of the conquest of the Rhine by these American doughboys. It is a story eloquent from every angle.

It appears that the Germans, who both feared and hated the brown-cheeked troopers of America, who had suddenly taken possession of their country, could not stand out against the historic and generic smile that the brood of the bald eagle habitually wears upon its face.

It caught the children first. An American soldier at home or away from home naturally loves children. He can't help playing with them. He wants to hoist them up on his broad shoulders and to fold them under his overcoat against the warm beat of his heart.

It doesn't make any difference to him whether they are German children or Hottentots, only so they are "kids." Far from his own land, the children of the alien were something that he could soothe his homesickness with. And so he smiled at them, and no child, anywhere, can stand out against a smile.

Besides, the children of the Rhine didn't know anything about "kultur" or frightfulness or hate. God hides those hideous things away from children. And so the smile won them, and they came to the doughboys and climbed happily on their shoulders.

Back of the children stood the mothers of the Rhine. They saw what the American soldier is. They got a glimpse of the shining gold of his heart; the radiance of his soul gleamed upon their sight.

Open, then, were flung the doors and windows of the once sullen guardian river of the fatherland. The hausfraus of the Rhine went out and asked the doughboys to come and eat Christmas dinner with them.

II.

THERE can be a lot of sick sentimentalism over a thing like this. A lot of maudlin tears can be wept. All of which would be in the nature of a mistake. But, it would be a mistake also to blind our eyes to what it means.

In the first place, if the American soldiers on the Rhine are not burning with a desire to kill the population, but, instead prefer to fraternize with them and to play with their children, where do we get the authority to hold meetings and cheer for the fire-eating orators, who declare that the Rhine should be made to look like the Shenandoah Valley once upon a time after everybody got through with it?

Shall we send a delegation over to the Rhine to tell our soldiers that we want them to quit smiling and turn in and kick the Teuton around like a hound dog, because he certainly would do that to us were the tables turned?

Who will volunteer to serve on the committee which is to frame the message up and carry it to the boys on the Rhine, which they first conquered with guns and now have conquered with smiles?

Well, but if those Germans were over here on the Mississippi or the Ohio or another of our rivers what would they be doing to us? Is it not for us to do to them as they would do to us if they had the chance?

It seems that God has made the doughboy wiser than He made us. It seems still to be true that the bravest are the tenderest. And, it is absolutely certain that there will be a lot of old German Bibles opened now wherein is written the Golden Rule which says: "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you."

And it will then dawn upon them that America practices the Golden Rule. They will see that the strongest and the mightiest of all the nations harbors no vengeance in its heart, even against a foe who has outraged the very name of mercy.

Little nations of small soul could never bring themselves to a thing like that. But America is not a little nation, and its soul is the soul of Him who spoke His deathless words on the dusty trails of Galilee.

III.

THERE is no possibility that Germany will be permitted to escape responsibility for the crimes and depredations that she has committed against civilization.

The Kaiser must be brought to the bar of justice and made to suffer as any other murderer, proved guilty, has been made to suffer. The membership of the Prussian government that brought about and prosecuted the war should be made to suffer the supreme penalty also.

And, we should go farther than that. No effort should be spared to hunt down every individual soldier who committed an atrocity in the war, who mutilated a child or outraged a woman; and he should be hanged like a dog.

This would not be vengeance. It would be justice under the law.

Vengeance is another thing, and it is always a useless thing. Moreover, it is a thing that the Lord God has reserved for Himself. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

When all these things have been done, it were well then to make over what is left of the German nation, staggering under the burden of reparation that shall be hers for generations to come, into a nation of people in harmony with the rest of mankind.

That there is hope that this can be done is evident in the attitude of the people of the Rhine country. It is evident that they have already come to the point where they see that it is not America, or England, or France that should be the objects of their hate, but that it is the masters whom they have blindly served to their great cost and humiliation.

These former masters, who said to them, as Pharaoh said to his hirelings: "Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore; let them go and gather straw for themselves."

The war has taken the scales from the eyes of the people of Germany. And the question now is shall they be given a chance to enter into the harmony of life, or shall they be forever excluded from it?

IV.

THE American doughboy, conquering the stubborn and sullen people of the Rhine with his kindly heart and all-embracing smile, gives us the answer to all these solemn problems.

No nation has ever been conquered by guns. They have been beaten and subdued and kept under for perhaps a thousand years or longer, but they never were conquered. They waited always for a day to come when they could rise again.

It is the same with nations as it is with men. One man downs another in a fight and puts his knee on the other's body and holds him down. But, the moment he relaxes his knee the other leaps to his feet and hurls a rock or grabs a knife.

The fact is that we must either patiently educate Germany into the harmony of life or keep her under our knee to writhe and fume there in hate, waiting for the chance to get from under that she may hurl a stone at our heads or grab a knife with which to stab us.

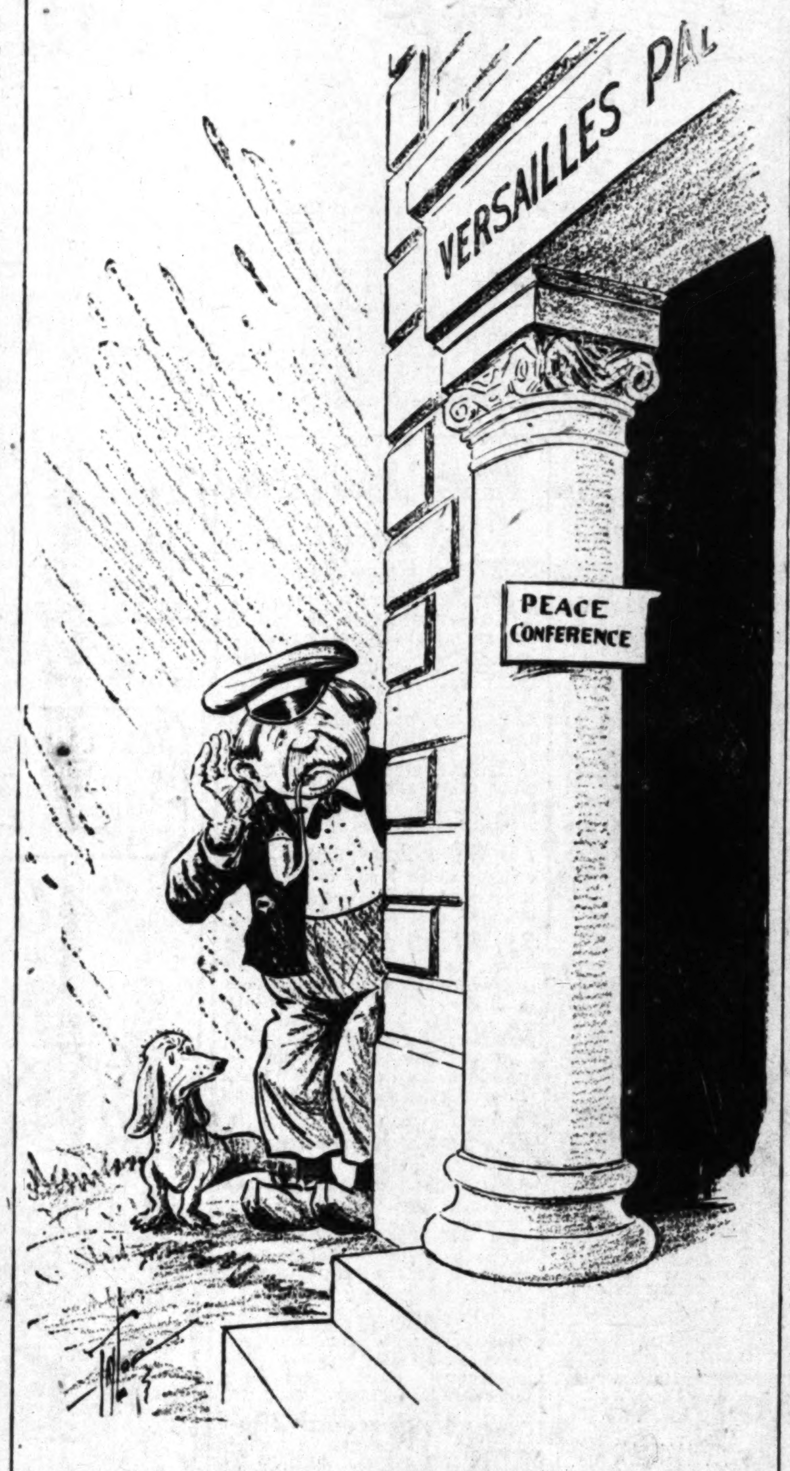
We are free to confess that we have small sympathy with those who cry to have the people of Germany thrust down into the everlasting flames of hell.

We do not regard such a cry as constituting either true Christianity or good common sense.

From the standpoint of Christianity it is an attitude that will not stand analysis. From a standpoint of business and common sense it is puerile because it involves too many policemen and too much expense, not to speak of the chance of making it impossible for Germany to pay that which she owes.

Patience is one of the greatest of the Christian virtues. The patient man never fails in the end. Patient nations do not fail, as America has amply demonstrated in her dealings with her neighbors and with the world.

Not Yet.



TRUSTEES OF WORLD'S PEACE. President Wilson continues to elaborate his plans for a League of Nations in his European addresses. Each time that he speaks he elucidates a new thought concerning the concert of nations to enforce peace, or gives a further development to ideas already expressed. In his address at the historic Guildhall of London yesterday, speaking from a stage that has been a forum of democracy for more than a century, the President declared that the Peace Conference must unify "a single, overwhelming, powerful group of nations which shall be the trustees of the peace of the world."

In the course of his address the President asserted that the minds of the leaders of the British government are moving in the same channels as his own, and that they are agreed that the key to peace is to be found in its guarantees rather than in the items of the pact. These items would remain scraps of paper unless they were backed by a concert powerful enough to support and enforce them. American and British thought are apparently unified in demanding a peace of justice supported by force. Disarmament will not be carried to the point that national governments will be so weakened as to permit possible overthrow by a sudden uprising of the forces of anarchy and organized lawlessness.

President Wilson repeated a previous utterance that "force wins battles, but justice wins victories," and continued: "The people of the world want peace and want it now, not merely by conquest of arms, but by agreement of mind." Referring to his fourteen fundamentals he said: "Those principles are clearly and definitely enough stated to make their application a matter that should afford no fundamental difficulty." The President's Guildhall speech will be remembered because it tends to clarify the atmosphere regarding proportionate representation at the peace table. There will be seats for the representatives of every people that honestly desires to become a part in the new world concert, and questions which would tend to divide the sentiment of those assembled will be avoided. The President has made clear that there is a universal agreement of mind among free peoples for a League of Nations, and that where such an agreement of mind exists its application will be but a question of details.

In his reply to the address of the King at Buckingham Palace the President said: "Every influence that the American people have over the affairs of the world is measured by their sympathy and with the aspirations of free men everywhere. . . . We have used great words; all of us have used the great words 'right' and 'justice' and now we are to prove whether or not we understand these words and how they are to be applied to the particular settlements which must conclude this war. And we must not only understand them, but we must have the courage to act on our understanding." After declaring that "the hearts of men have never beaten so singularly in unison before, men have never before realized how little difference there was between right and justice in one latitude and in another, under one sovereignty and another," the President gave the following happy expression to the moral force that is compelling the forward impulse towards a permanent peace of justice and mutual amity:

And it will be our high privilege, I believe, sir, not only to apply the moral judgment of the world to the particular settlements which we shall attempt, but also to organize the moral force of the world to preserve those settlements, to steady the forces of mankind and to make the right and the justice to which great nations like our own have devoted themselves the predominant and controlling force of the world.

And what memories the address of England's King to America's President in imperial Buckingham Palace must have awakened! In that classic banquet hall, where the American rebels had been so roundly denounced by one English King, a descendant of that King welcomed a son of the third generation of those rebels as an equal and thanked his countrymen through him for their part in preserving the automomy of the free peoples. If anyone doubts that Anglo-Saxon thought has kept abreast the progress of the world that doubt is dispelled by the democratic atmosphere which pervades President Wilson's London reception. And the President is to be congratulated for the poise and tact he displayed in avoiding controversial issues and devoting himself to the fundamentals for which all free peoples have fought. The League of Nations will begin a de facto existence just as soon as the Peace Conference assembles. Right there and at that moment will be the birth of the League of Nations—sounded by the first rap of the Conference gavel.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

BALMY DAYS.

We've been conserving bread, we've been conserving grease; and now we look ahead to bounteous days of peace, when one may eat a pie and feel no blush of shame; how good to say good-by to warfare's dismal game! How good to put four spoons of sugar in your tea, nor care two picayunes who is around to see! When streams were running red with blood of angry foes I lived on sawdust bread and prunes and things like those. And if I tried to sneak some sugar or some jam, my wife would wildly shriek, "You're knifing Uncle Sam! You're slacking just as much as some pro-German dub! It simply beats the Dutch how I must watch the grub!" Oh, those were bitter times, dark, tragic, galling years; you noticed how my rhymes were dripping salty tears. The bard who's fed on prunes and substitutes for pie can't put into his runes much zest, though he may try. If he's deprived of ham, condemned to gnawing bones, he cannot write a psalm that's full of golden tones. The lyre seems dead and dumb, its strings are still and mute, when all the grub is bum and miserly, to boot. But now come brighter days, with peace, the boon that's sweet; now mark my soaring lays, when I have pies to eat.

WALT MASON.

If the saying be a true one that the ears of him who is talked about always burn, what shall be said of the auricular appendage of the profiteers? What the common folks are saying about them is a shame.

THE LANCER.

I have just returned to America from New York.

In case this crushing sarcasm slides off without an ouch I will make it plainer.

Every time I go there I hate it worse. But I don't see what moiety of disgust there will be left for the next time I go. I seem to have come to the depex of disapproval.

In case you have never been there let me slip you the truth.

New York is a shabby, dirty, ramshackle old dump. You hear many gushing movie ladies who tell you that they are going to New York to do their shopping; but they could do better on Broadway, Los Angeles. I never have seen a store in New York as handsome and well equipped as some of those right here at home.

New York is inhabited by immigrants, soubrettes and promoters. Without further investigation I would not like to say which is the most objectionable class.

It gets on your nerves to be served at breakfast by some kind of foreigner who can't speak the language; to have your shoes shined by a Greek who has to talk to you in the sign language. Time after time I went up in a crowded hotel elevator when I was the only American in the bunch.

Some outlander has introduced the habit of afternoon tea. This is where you see the soubrettes.

We were at a table in the Claridge when a languid show girl with drug-store hair came sauntering languidly by.

"Howdydo," she said, pausing at a nearby table where a movie queen was holding forth. "I am so tired. I have just been reha'sing."

"Is that so?" was the stinging come-back. "When do the principals begin to rehearse?"

A cruel shot; the blondined party simply evaporated.

I experienced the joys and benefits of government ownership. I don't know who is running the railroads since Mr. McAdoo jumped the job, but I pause to marvel at him. He is a genius in inefficiency.

When you come to think of it, it requires real talent to ruin the efficiency of the Pennsylvania Railroad in so short a time.

It used to be the model railroad of the world.

When I came out of New York I naturally chose that route, remembering its former clock-like precision.

The rough stuff began with the parcel-checking room. When I went to get my suit case nobody could find it. The new government-ownership force seemed to have no place to put things. When you gave them your suit case they tossed it gaily somewhere — anywhere that they were reasonably sure they couldn't find it. When train time came a long line of frantic passengers were waiting in line while the parcels force rushed around like a lot of Chinamen at a fire.

It was entertaining enough; but, having an engagement with a train, I proceeded to climb over the barrier and easily found the suit case myself on a shelf over which the entire force had looked nine or ten times. Having found it, three of the clerks insisted upon trying to carry it, while a few more clerks rushed around and resumed the process of bumping into each other.

But, after all, it was my mistake. I could have made time by letting the train go and walking to Chicago. I don't know what the engineer was waiting for most of the time. I heard of a train down South where the engineer waited for a farmer's hen to lay another egg so he could take an even dozen to town.

At any rate, for an extra fare, limited train, which has the right of way over the whole earth, to manage to limp into Chicago four hours late is really an accomplishment.

Wondrous is the Democratic railroad management.

It will be great for the farmers; I'll admit that. If government railroad management becomes permanent most people will save time by driving across the continent in a buggy and this will promote the sale of horse flesh and thus benefit stockraisers.

As the train loafed along passengers naturally fell into conversation. We would ordinarily have gotten out and walked for a while alongside the train, but it seemed that the rules forbade it.

But, at any rate, we talked and there were on board many men of nation-wide importance whose opinions were worth listening to.

They talked of the crisis of reconstruction and of the next election. There are many signs throughout the East to indicate that certain red forces of disaster will try hard to organize a soldiers' and workmen's party for the next Presidential election.

This will inevitably lead to the selection of some great war hero like Gen. Pershing to lead the opposition.

I had a curious feeling all the time I was in New York that America is waiting for a great thought splash. The whole world seems to be waiting for a leader to see the way.

The theaters are listless and uncertain. The magazines are bewildered and don't know which way to turn next.

Society women, business men, actors—they are waiting for the great spiritual hunch. We have come to the end of an era. We never can go back to the old life. We don't want to. Nobody wants to—especially the women who have learned the futility of living in a doll's house. We know we are going in a new way and over a new trail; but who will lay the course for us to steer by?

THE LANCER.

Just wait; the agent taking orders for "the only authentic history of the war, copiously illustrated and with an illuminated text," is coming around the corner. Get your snickersee ready.

THE WATCHMAN.

OF POLITICAL THOUGHT AND ACTION.

the Sentry on His Beat.

one and maybe three va- on the State Supreme Court to be filled within the next months, ambitious lawyers California are already fences for a campaign. It seldom costs as much money to run for an appointive office the campaigns usually are harder on the nerves because of the element of uncertainty that takes such a prominent part in all races of that sort.

Supreme Justice Sloss has announced that he will cast off the judicial ermine next month. Justice Shaw is reported to be preparing to retire in March and Justice Lawler, who has been in poor health for a long time, may also seek the privacy of his home.

I have heard that Superior Judge Craig is ambitious to step a notch or two higher and he has many friends who would go the limit for him. Judge Craig received the highest vote ever cast for a Superior Judge in this county and that may be given serious consideration by the Governor. In the recent scrap for the Appellate bench it was generally understood that Tom Hughes was strong for Judge Craig and if two Superior judges had been elevated it is believed Judge Craig would have landed one of the positions.

The one deterrent factor in the Supreme Court situation is the fact that to be a member of it one must reside in San Francisco or vicinity. But for this it is quite certain that there would be more candidates from Los Angeles. Most any big lawyer would accept with thanks an appointment to the Supreme bench if he did not have to leave the salubrious climate of the glorious Southland. This sounds a little like bull, but it is really true. The question of climate is a grave factor.

State Superintendent Gandier, who, by the way, is better known as the daddy of the local no-saloon ordinance than for his activities outside of Los Angeles, is optimistic over the outcome of the national "dry" amendment. He believes that he has at least forty-five of the eighty votes in the Assembly and at least twenty-three in the Senate. Notwithstanding his confidence, however, he is letting no grass grow under his No. 10s. He has called a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Saloon League for next Tuesday, at which plans will be perfected for the drive to be made upon Sacramento during the early days of the next session. It appears to me that there is more than an equal chance of California's legislative bodies ratifying the law which would make the United States dry as a herring bone one year from the date it is certified by the Secretary of State. Dr. Gandier thinks that two-thirds of the States will ratify the amendment by not later than the middle of February and that the result will be certified by March. If his calculations are correct the United States will be transformed into a great Sahara on or about March 1, 1920.

Martin Mádsen, the Governor's private secretary, who sometimes makes a fellow stand in an anteroom three or four days waiting for an opportunity to see the Chief Executive and incidentally gets him hotter every day, is in town. The purpose of his visit is to line up the southern Assemblymen behind H. W. Wright for the next Speaker. Madsen can't understand why Wright will go to the capital unsupported by his own delegation. He says no less than sixty Assemblymen will vote for him, but he wants to make it unanimous. I can tell him why Wright is in Dutch down here. He is the egotist who declared during the fall campaign that he believed in economy, but did not think the State should set the example. He said it would be poor advertising for California to get the name of "tight wad." A majority of the local Assemblymen were elected upon a platform of economy and they cannot conscientiously vote for a man who had the nerve to suggest that the State stand by and let the other fellow do it.

That an attempt will be made to swing the local members into line through the threat that a vote against Wright means antagonism to the Governor is rumored. There is no foundation for the threat, however. I know several Assemblymen who are good friends of the Governor and who may be expected to support him all the way who will vote against Wright. Whether they do or not will make little difference. The slate has been written and Wright is a cinch.

During the week there was a rumor bobbing up every day or so to the effect that the Association for Betterment of Public Service which "put over" a majority of the Assembly from this district and also Senator Hart is preparing to launch a new candidate for Mayor. Believe me, that is the bunk. Mayor Woodman will have no opposition from that element. It represents the big business men who do things and they are unanimous in the assertion that Mayor Woodman is the best business man's Mayor we have had in many a year.

Here is what you may expect the association to do. It no doubt will get behind a ticket of common-sense candidates for the Council. It will oppose the re-election of a majority of the incumbents. Its programme should work out. When the people learn the names of candidates who are sworn to economy and against freakish legislation, such as the Sunday closing bill, they can be depended upon to vote right.

Mayor Woodman has rid his official family of another political enemy. He let Byron Erckenbrecker go, supplanting him with Lester Robinson. The Mayor believes that his administration cannot be successful if it is filled with officials who do not work in harmony with his own views and that is the reason he shoved the skids under a lot of them during the past year or more. Several more will get it during the coming week.

They say that John J. Hamilton is behind the move to oust Supervisor Cogswell upon the ground that he is not a legalized citizen. I don't know anything about the merits of the case; but I have been wondering what Mr. Hamilton would gain even if Mr. Cogswell is unseated. He certainly does not think the Governor would hand the job to him. No, No, John, you are a dead one as far as politics is concerned.

They say Fulton Lane is opposed to the appointment of H. Z. Osborne, Jr., to the position of chief engineer of the Board of Public Utilities. Mr. Lane is sore because the Mayor had his job abolished a few months ago. Commissioners Wirsching and King are for Mr. Osborne and he will get the job despite Mr. Lane.

Police Chief Butler has been appointed for another year. He has made good on the job and the fact that he has a lot of knockers is a compliment to him. You know if everybody was for him he would be under suspicion.

Lee Heath, who has been a member of the police department for years, has been given a captaincy. He would rather be a police judge and may be expected to run again four years hence. In the last campaign he came mighty near nosing out Judge Richardson.

THE WATCHMAN.

SEIZE TRUNKS WITH WHISKY.

Two Hundred Pints Cleverly Packed Said to Have Gone from Here.

Disappointment for some Los Angeles person is contained in news from Tucson, Ariz., that two trunks skillfully packed with 200 pints of whisky have been seized there and the negro porter, in whose care they are supposed to have been consigned, arrested.

Officers at Tucson expressed the utmost admiration for the way in which the trunks had been fixed up in Los Angeles. Partitions had been made, just the width of a flask and packing had been used liberally to avoid breakage, while over all had been placed a wooden covering. Ed Paul, the porter, denied that he knew anything of the trunks or their contents.

FILIPINO MARTYR WILL BE HONORED.

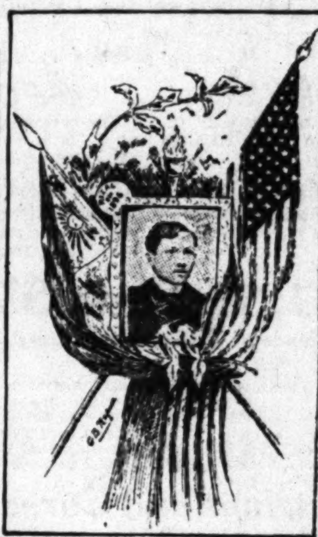
ANNIVERSARY OF DEATH OF DR. JOSE RIZAL WILL BE OBSERVED HERE.

In observance of the twenty-second anniversary of the martyrdom of Dr. Jose Rizal, the national hero of the Filipinos, who was shot by order of the Spanish government at Manila on December 30, 1896, an interesting musical and literary programme will be given at the California Temple of Arts on South Grand avenue tomorrow evening under the auspices of the Filipino Students' Society of Southern California.

Among those who will deliver addresses are former Judge Herbert D. Gale, for thirteen years a resident of the Philippines, where at different times he acted as chief supply officer for the Philippine Constabulary, was for five years Judge of the Court of First Instance and prosecuting attorney at Manila. D. A. Lobaton will act as chairman and Pedro Q. Paguio, president of the Filipino Students' Society of Los Angeles, as toastmaster.

Among those who will contribute to the programme of music are Miss Gladys Wagner, coloratura soprano; Jack Vonack, Pedro Abralin, Miss Vivian Stafford, Miss Bernice Allison, Miss Lillian Armstrong, Pedro Tolentino, president of the Filipino Liberal Union of Los Angeles, and Ignacio Magbuhat of the local submarine base, who will give the biography of Dr. Rizal.

Miss Norma Rose Berier will read "My Last Farewell," written by Dr.



Dr. Jose Rizal.

preceding his execution. The poem, as translated, begins:

Farewell, dear Fatherland, clime of the sun caress'd,
Pearl of the Orient seas, one Eden lost!
Gladly now I go to give thee this faded life's best,
And were it brighter, fresher, or more blest,
Still would I give it thee, nor count the cost.

On the field of battle, 'mid the frenzy of fight,
Others have given their lives, without doubt or heed;
The place matters not—cypress or laurel or lily white,
Scaffold or open plain, combat or martydom's plight,
'Tis ever the same to serve our home and country's need.

The officers of the Filipino Students' Society are: Pedro Q. Paguio, president; A. A. Palma, vice-president; J. Jabonata, secretary; S. Peralta, corresponding secretary, and R. Reyes, treasurer. There are about

WINS WAR DECORATION.

Cross is Bestowed on Colored Physician of Los Angeles for Valiant Service.

Dr. Claudius Ballard, a colored physician of this city, who is now a first lieutenant with the Three Hundred and Seventieth Infantry in France, has been awarded the "Cross of War" according to word received yesterday by friends. He was participating in the Belgian drive when the order to cease firing was received, and in his letter says that when his regiment arrived in a Belgian city after the armistice went into effect the Belgians decorated the members with flowers and gave them all sorts of things to eat and drink.

"During the last few days of the drive we suffered many hardships," he writes. "The Germans tried to check our progress by felling trees across the roads and blowing up bridges. Many times I had only a piece of bread or a cup of coffee to last me all day. We slept on the ground at night and awoke to find ourselves covered with frost or ice, but we endured such conditions and came through in excellent health."

TELLS OF SEEING MAN CRUCIFIED.

"Ace" with Thirteen Planes to His Credit Here.

Huns Pinned Prisoner to Floor with Bayonets.

California Flyer has Silver "Bones" in Leg.

Capt. Ted Murphy of the British Royal Flying Corps, an ace with thirteen enemy airplanes to his credit, is the guest for a few days of friends in Los Angeles and Pasadena. He is here from Calexico where he and two brother aces, Capt. Fred Libby and Capt. E. M. Roberts, are recuperating.

Capt. Ted Murphy.

Capt. Murphy, who before his entrance into the Canadian service was a newspaper cartoonist on the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and papers in New York, Chicago and Cincinnati, is a native of San Francisco. The family home is at No. 1515 Jackson street in that city. In August of 1914 he went to Canada to enlist. His career in military service includes action in some of the most notable battles, wounds of first degree, capture of Huns and horrible treatment in prison camps, the witnessing of atrocities by the Germans upon their prisoners that are almost unbelievable, air raids pushed to success, and finally the shooting down of his plane and his fall of 2800 feet when twenty-seven of his bones were broken, and his final emerging from the hospital with a silver substitute for his left-leg bones and knee cap.

IN EARLY BATTLES.

Capt. Murphy enlisted at Vancouver, and his preliminary training was in Eastern Canada. He went overseas as a second lieutenant in the infantry in December, 1914, and participated in the battle of Ypres, where he was wounded by a bayonet thrust through his chin. In two weeks he was out of the hospital and back into action. At the battle of Vimy Ridge he was shot through the stomach, and after recovering he participated in the battle of Arracourt, thirty miles southwest of Lorraine, where he lost his brother, Capt. Frederick Murphy. He was with the Forty-third Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and won the Croix de Guerre when, with 600 men, he captured more than 800 Germans. Soon after this capture, Capt. Murphy and 364 men were captured by the Huns and placed in a prison camp just across the line from Arracourt.

"We were kept in that prison camp 163 days," said Capt. Murphy yesterday, "and the experiences can never be effaced from the memories of those who were so fortunate as to escape. Out of the number of men captured, only eighty-three were alive when we were rescued, and more than twenty of these died soon thereafter in our hospitals.

BREAD AND WATER.

"We were fed twice a day on bread and water, and once a week we had a sort of stew. When our men died, their bodies were simply piled up in one corner of the big shed and allowed to lie there and decompose. At the time we were recaptured, the bodies were taken care of by our own men.

"In this prison camp I saw one of our men crucified for some minor offense. The Huns held him down on a barn door, which had been laid on the ground, and thrust bayonets through his arms and legs. I, myself, for an infringement of the rules, was tied up to a post with a chain and was given 125 lashes with a Russian clout. Two men had their hands cut off and were sent back across the line to show our men what would happen to them if they were captured. I can scarcely talk about what I saw and know happened in this prison camp.

"After we were retaken, I participated in the second battle of Ypres, and there got chlorine gas, and for three months was deaf and almost blind. When I recovered, I went into the Fying Corps and was trained at Aldershot Field, London, and then assigned to the Forty-third Aero Squadron, near Omar, Belgium. It was there I brought down my first enemy plane, in July, 1917. At Lens I got three planes, while with the Forty-seventh Squadron, and then at Lille I got nine. My record is nine 'official' and four 'unofficial' planes—thirteen in all.

DOWN IN FLAMES.

"With my thirteenth plane came disaster. I was shot down in flames and fell 2800 feet, breaking twenty-seven bones. After a long siege in the hospitals, I emerged with a silver knee cap and silver substitute for bones in one of my legs. I left the hospital on February 5, 1918, and at Bordeaux was given six months' sick leave, when I returned to Halifax; then went to New York and back home to San Francisco. It was while there that I received my discharge, with the rank of captain.

Capt. Murphy expects to return to Calexico within a few days.

NOTED VETERAN GETS FURLOUGH.

Change for Man Who Killed Sitting Bull's Son.

Picturesque Figure Started Chief on Warpath.

Was in Bondage to German Before Civil War.

John Anderson, ex-slave, former member of the United States Army, and known in the West as the man who killed Sitting Bull's son and caused the old Sioux warrior to undertake the extermination of white people in his domain, has taken a furlough from the Pacific Branch Soldiers' Home for the purpose of sojourning for some time at Gila Bend, Ariz.

John Anderson, after many years' residence at Bozeman, Mont., entered the Soldiers' Home some months ago, as his increasing age made it difficult for him to earn his living. He has been one of the picturesque figures at the Home, where there are so many men of striking mien or unusual history, and his stories of frontier soldiering have had a wide vogue among the veterans—frequently termed the "Boys in Blue," but this appellation will have to be used with reservations, for the government is now issuing olive drab uniforms to the men when any new issue of clothing is made.

BORN IN SLAVERY.

John Anderson is the son of a full-blooded Cherokee Indian and a full-blooded negress. He was born in slavery, in the Cherokee nation, now Oklahoma, eighty-six years ago. While that section was presumed to be free territory, slavery is said to have existed there in many instances, and half-breeds, as well as some Indians, were under its bondage. John Anderson was the slave of a German, and he tells of many cruelties which were inflicted upon him and others.

Finally, in the latter part of 1861, he made his escape and joined the Union army, serving through the Civil War. Then he joined the Regular United States Army, leaving that service in 1872, when he went to Bozeman, Mont.

ATTACKED BY SIOUX.

A gold strike was reported on Porcupine Creek, just below Rosebud, in 1874, and Anderson was engaged as a guide to take in a party of prospectors. The party was attacked by a large band of Sioux Indians along the site of what was later the Battle of Yellowstone, where Gen. Custer met his fate. There were several hundred Indians and only about twenty white men, with their colored guide. The Indians were led by Little Sitting Bull, son of the chieftain, and he and John Anderson came into direct conflict. Anderson shot him dead with a bullet from a pistol, and the Indians retreated.

It is said that while Sitting Bull previously had been very antagonistic to the white people, the killing of his son determined him to attempt to wipe out the whites, and then followed the war that eventually caused the sacrifice of Gen. Custer's life.

BOOTLEGGERS BROKEN BY DOUBLE-CROSSING

PHOENIX INDUSTRY FAILS TO SHOW PROFITS EXCEPT TO AGENTS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Dec. 24.—There has been "double-crossing," with consequent dissension and distrust, that has broken the unity of the bootlegging industry of Phoenix.

A few weeks ago there was successfully "run" a cargo of thirty-three cases of whisky, brought by automobile from Needles, Cal., and stored in a local cellar for later distribution to retail agents. The funds for the importation are understood to have been furnished by an Arizona business man. One of the lieutenants is charged with a succession of acts of treachery against the interests of his chief. He is said to have used the business man's automobile in taking away thirty of the cases of whisky and for the retailing of the fluid to his own enrichment, to have tapped the business man's till to the extent of at least $200 and then with one or more companions, to have used the auto for a journey to Maricopa, where a west-bound train was boarded. From California is said to have been received a letter that narrated all circumstances of the exploit, incidentally telling where the machine could be found, and advising the addressee that if he wished to prosecute there would be evidence submitted that would interest him and the authorities. It is believed he will not prosecute.

Insult was added to injury by a note to the Sheriff, telling where the whisky case was to be found. The Sheriff's men found the three cases, welcomed through the fact that physicians' drafts, for the influenza treatment, had lowered the jail stock of whisky by 4000 pints. When the bootleggers' association learned that only three cases had been taken there were open charges that the Sheriff's deputies had sequestered thirty cases for their own use. But the letter from California has cleared the officers, though it brought domestic bitterness. The matter is being investigated by the county attorney.

SEEK TO EXTERMINATE CROP-DESTROYING PEST

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 21.—An intensive campaign for the eradication of destructive rodents has been undertaken by George H. Hecke, State Commissioner of Horticulture. He has been advised by the United States Bureau of Biological Survey that $30,000,000 of the $300,000,000 annual loss to crops in the United States due to rodents, has been confined to California.

A campaign of education which will be carried into every county of the State has been launched in charge of W. C. Jacobsen, superintendent of the rodent counties. Practical field demonstrations are being given in squirrel and rodent control work, and later field assistants will go into the various counties to assist in the extermination of the pests.

MINIMUM WAGE FOR WOMEN SET

Industrial Welfare Order in Effect on Thursday.

Ten Weekly in Factories for Experienced Workers.

Public Hearing to be Held to Discuss Changes.

The Industrial Welfare Commission has fixed a minimum wage of $10 a week for experienced women working in factories. The order, which will become effective next Thursday, January 2, defines an experienced woman as one who has been employed in any manufacturing industry for a period of six months, and an experienced minor is one who has been employed in any manufacturing industry for a period of nine months.

Rates less than the legal minimum rate for an experienced woman may be paid to learners in manufacturing establishments, provided that women entering employment, 18 years of age and over, are paid not less than $8 per week for the first three months and not less than $9 per week for the second three months of employment. At the end of this time they are entitled to not less than $10 per week.

Women and boys entering employment under 18 years of age must be paid not less than $7.50 per week for the first three months, not less than $8 per week for the second three months, and not less than $9 per week for the third three months, and thereafter must be rated and paid as experienced workers.

LEARNERS LIMITED.

The number of learners in any establishment must not exceed 25 per cent. of the total number of employees.

Night work for women is prohibited, except in essential war industries or in continuous processes which cannot be controlled in any other way. The order requires that such women night workers must receive permits issued by the Industrial Welfare Commission, and also makes provision for their being served a hot meal when they are required to work for a four-hour period after 10 o'clock at night. Night work is defined as being work performed after 10:30 p.m. and before 6 a.m.

All manufacturing establishments are required to file with the commission copies of their pay rolls for the period (weekly, semi-monthly or monthly) immediately following the date on which the order becomes effective, which is January 2.

FOR PUBLIC HEARING.

The Industrial Welfare Commission expects to hold soon a public hearing for the amendment and alterations of all minimum wage orders issued by the Industrial Welfare Commission to date. The purpose of this emergency conference is that a minimum wage may be fixed that is more nearly adequate to supply a wage to the working women of California than the one now in operation. The greatly-increased cost of living in this State has made this action necessary, it is stated.

The Industrial Welfare Commission has also prohibited home work or work outside of place of business except on permit issued by the commission. The object of this order is to try to prevent the growth of sweat-shop labor in this State, which is a fast-growing evil.

TORPEDO MISSES SHIP, SINKS ANOTHER U-BOAT

HIGH SEA LIFTED BRITISHER OVER DEADLY MISSILE SAVING HER.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Now that censorship rules have been much relaxed, extraordinary stories of close shaves and unexpected happenings are being published. Hard to beat is one related by the Liverpool Evening Express. It tells how a torpedo from a U-boat passed under an intended victim—which at the psychological moment was lifted beyond its reach by a big wave—and administered the quietus to another enemy submarine on the other side of the steamer. Here is the paper's account of it:

The British steamer Algories, commanded by Capt. Frederick Taylor, was off Bardsey Island and had a cargo of timber from Rosslare to Garston. There was a heavy sea on and the ship was pitching about.

The first to see the first submarine was the gunner, who also spotted the track of a torpedo which, if something like a miracle had not happened, would have struck them amidships. Nothing could be done in time to turn the ship clear of danger, but a heavy sea lifted high on its crest the steamer, which was only drawing a few feet of water and then these who had just been expecting to be torpedoed themselves, saw a second U-boat, which was working in conjunction with the one on the other side of the steamer, struck by the torpedo.

They heard a deafening explosion and saw a mountain of spray thrown up into the air.

ALASKA PLANS OIL TANK BARGE LINE.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

CORDOVA (Alaska) Nov. 26.—Construction of three tank barges to carry oil from Katalla to Cordova, if built and put into operation next summer as planned, will mark the first tank barge line to be established in Alaska.

Specifications of the barges, which are planned by an oil company call for tank capacity of 600 barrels each. It is proposed to build the barges either of wood and steel or concrete, with decks for use in carrying freight.

Up to the present a small launch has been utilized in carrying oil supplies to Cordova from Katalla.

Oh! the Splendor of the Rich New Silks that Have Been Gathered for this Far-famed

Ninth Annual Silk Sale

$33,000 Worth of the Choicest Weaves of the Loom

Underpricings of 20%, 25%, One-Third, and Some Even Lowered a Half

—How can we truly convey to you the all-importance of this Annual Silk Event?

—Would that these silks had tongues to tell of their beauty, their unusualness, their timeliness, for it is only at an Annual occasion of this kind that such variety, such richness and such economies can be expected.

—If we were to weave the romance of the silks, and how it was that we came to possess them it would take pages in the telling.

—This is going to be 1 wonder year of silks. Women express happiness and joy in the possession of them. They give expression to their happiness in the wearing of silks—silks are truly women's own raiment.

—And now, that the Peace of the World is calling for rejoicing women will this year demand more silks than ever.

—This Annual Silk event at The Broadway has become a classic in the merchandising events of Los Angeles. It is natural, then, for you to expect much and for us to see that you are not disappointed.

—In this thought is summed up the reason for the success and advancement of a sale that has now reached its Ninth Annual distribution.

—We want you to read the list of silks that are here with the assurance that the silks are all we claim for them, the prices worthy of this Annual event. Silks that you may depend upon.

—The sale opens Thursday, January 2, on the Second Floor, and the women who are now making their plans for the coming season will be buying silks for many months, taking advantage of the rich opportunities heralded in this announcement.

RENARD PLEADS FOR CHILDREN.

Remember Orphans, Appeal of French Officer.

Member of Mission Tells of Reconstruction Needs.

Asks Help for Victims of German Barbarians.

BY LIEUT. ROBERT RENARD
Of the French Mission to America.

Of all the problems confronting us at the present time, the reconstruction of France is probably the one which appeals most to our American friends. For centuries the fair land of France has been the battlefield of civilization and the furious waves of the barbarian invasions broke against the indomitable resistance of the French, and so it was for a long time with Gauls against Romans.

The great revolution of 1789 added further glory and grandeur to France's position in the world. The country of chivalry and higher aspirations which had proclaimed the Christian ideals of brotherly love, refined the manners of brutal warriors by instituting knighthood for the protection of the widow and the orphan, the humble and weak against the mighty; established a code of respectful courtesy to women, sent crusaders to the Holy Land, was now solemnly asserting the rights of man against the might of hordes of barbarians in another crusade for liberty, equality and fraternity. All the tyrants of Europe trembled with indignation and fear on their tottering thrones. They won "for a time" but the seed thrown to the winds, though trampled by their soldier's horses, partly contained by poisoned shells and heavy artillery, continued to grow.

EARNED GREAT LOVE.

Wherever men were groaning under tyranny they looked to France for help. Whenever they "called to arms" France heard and came. Thus she won the hatred of all crowned heads, of those who had determined to rule by violence. But she earned the love of all who yearned for freedom.

Germany, in her fiendish scheme of world domination, knew that her main obstacle would be France and she patiently prepared a formidable plan of utter destruction against the land of liberty. In 1870 she robbed us of our iron mines. We discovered new ones. In 1914 she captured these at the very outset of the great war.

The Franco-German war of 1870 had been her first attempt to cripple us. We recovered from our defeat so marvelously and rapidly that Germany this time determined to so thoroughly destroy the country that it could not recover for a century. "Delenda est Francia" was her slogan. She carried away the machinery and tools of the industrial regions, destroyed the factories, cut down the fruit trees, enslaved and starved the inhabitants and ravaged agricultural districts down to chaotic "neant." Her plan was to destroy our race because we are the land of liberty and generous sentiments, of enlightened culture and chivalry, the land of the revolution which first in Europe declared for the rights of man. Germans are barbarians, they are the supporters of military autocracy, the remains of feudalism, Prussianism, and all other noxious "isms" imaginable.

TERRIBLE TOLL.

One million and a half French soldiers killed in action, 1,000,000 hopelessly crippled—such is our toll. To have saved the liberty of the world, this is part of our burden only. Houses can be rebuilt, but lives cannot be revived. Our only hope is in our children, the children of those who made the supreme sacrifice on the field of honor, "to make the world a decent place to live in." If France is weakened the liberty of the world is weakened with her. That is the reason why the American Committee for the Fatherless Children of France has so kindly offered to help the innocent victims of this war, out of gratitude for the fathers, and to maintain in the world the everlasting France of the "Rights of Man."

The regeneration of France is absolutely a necessity to maintain the hegemony of the nation which has ever been the bulwark of civilization from medieval times. Ever generous, noble, grand, righteous and chivalrous, Americans whose sons are returning home safe and sound should remember the willing sacrifice of these 2,500,000 French heroes, and at Christmastide remember the million orphans left destitute by their sublime sacrifice.

PACKAGES MAY TURN ROMANCE TO TRAGEDY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 20.—Two parcels, as valuable as they are small, are stowed away in a Y.M.C.A. safe at Ippecourt, France. They give the only clue to one of the unfinished romances of the war. Each is addressed and ready for mailing to a girl back in America. Each contain a diamond ring and more than 1000 francs.

They will have to lie in that Red Triangle safe until the last casualty lists are published, for they were turned over to the "Y" secretary in trust by two young officers just a day or two before the fighting ceased.

"Say, doc," said the spokesman, "we want to leave these with you in case—well, you know. In the morning we're going after Heinie again. If we don't come back, send these things to the addresses on them."

They haven't come back—yet, but the "Y" man is not sure. Rings—diamond rings—should be messengers of joy to American girls, not harbingers of tragedy. So the "Y" man is keeping the rings until the officers turn up—or until the last casualty lists tell their tale of supreme sacrifice.

Kilauea to Overflow in February.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

HONOLULU, Dec. 3.—Scientists of the Hawaiian Volcano Observatory report that recent activities of the volcano of Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, indicate that there will be a great overflow of molten lava from the central pit in February.

CAR SERVICE BEST IN WEST.

Figures Show Superiority of Los Angeles Railway.

More Facilities Here than in San Francisco.

South Better Treated than North in Rush Hour.

The superiority of Los Angeles street car service over that of San Francisco has been figured out by George Baker Anderson of the public relations department of the Los Angeles Railway. According to his calculations this city has the best street car service in the West. He bases his conclusions upon a careful comparison of Los Angeles street railway service with that of the Bay city.

He considers Market street from the ferry loop to Geary street the throat of the business district street car traffic in San Francisco, and argues that Broadway and Spring streets, together with Main street, form the main artery of the local traffic. He sums the situation up as follows:

During the period of normal traffic, sixty-five cars of the Municipal Railways and 153 of the United Railroads, a total of 218, are in service on lower Market street, San Francisco. During the rush hour, from 5 o'clock to 6 p.m., the number is increased to 90 (38.5 per cent.) on the Municipal line and 184 (20.3 per cent.) on the United Railroads, a total of 274. The total number of cars in the rush hour service on lower Market street—representing something like thirty different lines—is but 25.7 per cent. greater than during the period of normal service.

During normal service in Los Angeles there are 104 cars on the Broadway line and 106 on the Spring street line, making a total of 210. During the rush hour there are 183 cars on Broadway and 193 on Spring street, making a total of 376. The increase in service on Broadway during the rush hour amounts to 76 per cent. and on Spring street to 82 per cent. The increase on these two lines, to handle the rush hour business, is more than three times the increase at San Francisco.

Mr. Anderson says that Main street is also to some extent a portion of the throat of traffic here. On Main street the number of yellow line cars in service jumps from sixty-eight in the middle of the day to 131 in the rush hour, a gain of 93 per cent. On Hill street there are forty-eight cars doing mid-day service and seventy during the rush hour—an increase of 6 per cent.

Another point that should not be overlooked is the interference with northbound and southbound street car service by travel on intersecting lines and by crosstown vehicle traffic here. It is much greater than in San Francisco. There are no crosstown street car lines on lower Market street.

In this city, during the rush hour, on Fifth street fifty-five cars cross Broadway and Spring street during the normal period and ninety-three during the rush hour, an increase of 70 per cent. Beside this there is the crosstown street car travel on Third and Seventh streets to be considered.

These figures show conclusively that much better provision is made for the requirements of travel during the rush hour in Los Angeles than in San Francisco.

CHURCH STRIKES OIL.

Royalty for Use of a Country Congregation's Lot Reaches $300,000 a Year.

Oil is bringing big wealth to the little country Baptist Church in the Merriam community, near Ranger, Tex. It was only after the most prayerful consideration that the deacons of the church decided to accept the offer that was made them a few months ago by a firm of oil operators to lease the vacant part of the church lot for the purpose of drilling an oil well. The church received a cash consideration of $31,000 when the lease contract was signed. The contract also provided that one-eighth royalty of all oil produced should go to the church.

Success was met with in the first well, its output being close around 3000 barrels a day. At the present prices for the crude product the church's share from the sale of oil is about $800 a day, or at the rate of nearly $300,000 a year. When another well or two is put down this income may be doubled or trebled.

The fact that the production of the well is kept up on Sunday along with the other days of the week does not seem to disturb the religious sensibilities of the deacons or members of the congregation.

That money is a stimulus to church worship is shown by the big increase of the attendance and membership of this rural Baptist Church since it began piling up wealth. The deacons have not yet decided what will be done with the money that is flowing into the treasury. They have found it necessary, however, to make formal announcement that it will not be distributed among the congregation in the form of dividends, as was suggested by some of the members.—[Kansas City Times.

WILD ORGY IN RICE PLANNED BY CHINESE.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SEATTLE, Dec. 15.—There is high glee among the Oriental population of Puget Sound cities, and calendars on many walls are being marked day by day. Double-boiler pans are being prepared for 9000 tons of rice; the first importation allowed since the American food restrictions cut down rice imports will arrive here this month from Japan.

Because of the ban on imports the rice market has been very short and the favorite dish of the Oriental has been hard hit both in size and price.

INCREASE AREA UNDER COTTON.

Planters Sought Here for San Joaquin Venture.

Seed Oil Refining Plant is Planned for this City.

Promoter Prophesies Great Jump in Production.

Ultimately 1,000,000 bales of cotton will be grown in California, making the State the fourth largest cotton producer in the country, is the statement of Robert Hulme, vice-president and general manager of the California Products Company of Fresno, who visited the city Thursday to make plans whereby more of the San Joaquin Valley will be seeded to cotton.

Mr. Hulme's company, which has been established to further cotton production in the northern part of the State, where he says conditions are particularly favorable, has already started the first cotton gin in Central California at Fresno. Mr. Hulme said that as soon as more cotton can be obtained, a cottonseed compress will be established at Bakersfield, which he thinks will be the central point of the cotton industry of the valley. In addition a cottonseed oil refining plant is to be started in Los Angeles as soon as conditions warrant.

GROWERS WANTED.

"What we want right now," said Mr. Hulme, "are cotton growers. Our company, while it is by no means promoting land sales, will make arrangements either for the purchase or rental of acreage in the San Joaquin Valley for men who will plant cotton. We have the seed and will furnish it. We will supply expert supervision, and have been assured the aid of both State and county farm advisers.

"This new industry—new to California in parts other than the Imperial Valley—should prove particularly lucrative. We want to further cotton production and have established a big plant in Fresno, which cost more than $350,000. We shall open other establishments soon.

"The area we want to become cotton producing extends from Bakersfield to Sacramento. Conditions are excellent, schools are good and living conditions enticing. The land is especially adapted to cotton production; in fact, experts have proclaimed it better than the famous delta land of the Mississippi Valley.

EXCELLENT FOR COTTON.

"The cotton planting begins about April 1. We want to put in 60,000 acres. The seed we will provide. We will in no wise promote any real estate deals, but will, instead, make arrangements for the rental, or if the grower wishes it, the purchase of the property. There are thousands of acres not now under cultivation where the soil has been analyzed and proclaimed excellent for cotton.

"Cotton is a six months' crop, and brings quick money. We have already opened a branch, covering the Palo Verde Valley, at Blythe, and will have many more ramifications. What we want now is men who will plant cotton. We extend them every courtesy and will do everything we can to help them make good money. There is a wonderful chance, and agriculturists will learn that the cotton industry will perhaps be the greatest farming industry in the State. If growers interested in transferring their interests to the San Joaquin Valley will communicate with me at my Fresno office, everything possible will be done for them."

The first bale of northern-grown cotton was ginned at the Fresno plant a week ago. Over 1000 acres were planted this year, and it is expected that at least 3000 will be seeded in the spring.

JAPAN LOANS MILLIONS TO CHINESE TREASURY.

MUCH OF MONEY USED IN CIVIL WAR, IT IS ALLEGED BY NEWSPAPER.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

PEKING, Nov. 30.—Japan's loans to China are estimated by the Tokio correspondent of one Peking newspaper to have attained a total of about $148,885,000. Loans from Japan contracted by China in the present year are placed at $66,515,000.

The newspaper's correspondent alleges that according to his information much of the proceeds of the loans contracted this year has been diverted from the stipulated purposes for which they were made and have been "squeezed" by private persons or wasted in prosecution of the civil war. He elaborates as follows:

"The loans of $25,000,000 contracted by the Bank of Communications nominally for the purpose of effecting reforms in the said bank did nothing to attain that end but on the contrary, the value of the bank notes kept on dropping steadily. The proceeds of the Telegraph Administration loan amounting to $20,000,000 were also recklessly squandered. The military loan also amounting to $20,000,000 was contracted ostensibly for the purpose of participating in the European war by recruiting and specially training three divisions and eight brigades of troops. But the proceeds were used for prosecuting the internal war."

Further loans in process of negotiation by China are estimated by the correspondent to amount to about $70,000,000. Of this amount about $50,000,000 is intended for the purpose of establishing iron works. "According to the provision of the loan agreement the engineers and mechanics to be employed in these iron works must be engaged for the Chinese government by the Japanese," says the correspondent.

Huge signboards around the Nelson Monument, appealing to citizens to buy war bonds, were the first to feed the flames. Then a wooden hut, the property of the Y.M.C.A., was dragged to the pyre. Next came half a dozen German cannon, camouflaged with green, purple and yellow, rushed up with shoutings from St. James's Park, close by.

There were many policemen about, but they were helpless. The soldiers picked them up and threw them off the scene. Then the fire engines came out and turned streams on the blaze. The Australians turned the hose on the astonished firemen and swept them off their feet with their own ammunition.

CHRISTIE RETURNS.

WEARS OPTIMISTIC SMILE FOR 1919 OUTLOOK.

Back among us once more is Charles H. Christie, after six weeks spent in New York and other principal cities of the East, where film booking interests are the largest.

Mr. Christie announces that his company will show a decided expansion in 1919, and as proof of this he displayed a contract with the majority of the exchange managers handling Christie comedies, the new contract calling for the showing of a once-a-month special, to be made by the Christie company and released in two reels. The new comedies will be made under the personal direction of Al E. Christie, and while the story consideration will be first, yet the choice of cast for the two-reel Christie Specials will be a close second in the way of consideration.

Names and faces new to the Christie output, but familiar to the film world by reason of their appearing in feature pictures, will be identified with the once-a-month Christie Special releases.

"I have come back very confident of the splendid outlook for comedy, especially for the class of comedies which the Christie company has been making," said C. H. Christie, upon his return from New York a day or two ago. "Despite the various rumors of our changing our marketing system, we will continue to release through the strong independent exchanges with which we are affiliated. These exchanges have been giving us presentation equal, in many respects, to that given feature pictures, and we have based our continued refusal of offers to release on one programme or another to this fact, and to the additional worthy one that the independent exchange, with its large local organization, is continually growing in strength. Witness, for example, the success of such men as E. H. Emmick of San Francisco and Los Angeles, J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players of Chicago, who is now operating in ten of the Middle Western States; Harry S. Schwalbe of Philadelphia, who controls a flourishing exchange there, and in addition is the secretary of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit; Harry Charnas of the Standard Film Company, with offices in Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit, and the First National Exchanges of New York and Buffalo."

Al E. Christie, who will personally direct the once-a-month two-reel specials to be made by the Christie company, in addition to its regular weekly output of one reel of comedies, says that inasmuch as there are many two-reel pictures which are given to the public in five-reel lengths, he expects to make this rule work the other way, namely, he intends to give in his two-reel Christie Specials, a five-reel production condensed into two reels.

THE LITTLE LEES WON THE CHICKENS.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kid stars, didn't have any Christmas dinner, rightly speaking. Not until late in the evening did they get even a slice of the nice big turkey mother Lee cooked for them, and there was a very good reason. On Christmas morning a couple of friends called at the house in a machine and took the two children to Venice. After roaming around a while they found a place where you can roll a ball, and if you drop it in the proper slot you get a chicken. They rolled the balls until they had five nice chickens. The friend who drove the youngsters to the beach took two, his wife took two more, and little Jane, who, of course, had to have her way, took the last of the five.

As they got into the automobile to start for home, the chicken Jane was carrying got away, and the man in trying to catch it dropped the two chickens he had. In the mix-up he bumped into his wife and she lost her two. The chickens headed for the beach, only a short distance away, and a gathering crowd chased them. After half an hour they were corralled and restored to their owners. Mother Lee wasn't as thrilled as might have been expected about her daughter's feat of sportsmanship, especially as with a fourteen-pound turkey on the table, bringing a mere skinny chicken to table resembled coals to Newcastle. So before they ate their dinner, Jane and Katherine, trotting by their mother's side, started out to find some needy family on whom to bestow the trophy of Jane's skill; and you know how it is when you start out to look for anything, even a needy family—it always seems as if fate were against you. However, a family was found whose Christmas dinner had consisted only of corn beef and cabbage, and Jane thought was being neery enough; so that family is now spending all its spare coin fattening up the fowl for New Year's dinner.

OH! OH! BESSIE NOW HAS NAUGHTY TIGHTS.

Wearing tights is what Bessie Barriscale does in her next picture, "A Trick of Fate"—and they do say she looks awfully well in 'em! Yes, it's the first time in her life, because as a beginner she always appeared in dramatic roles, and on the screen she has nearly always affected those slithery, clinging gowns, which, even if low-and-behold, at least come well down around her neat ankles. Even when she played Raggedy Ann parts we merely caught a peep at her limbs.

It is as a Parisian dancer that Miss Barriscale makes her debut in tights, but in order to balance things up, she also plays another character, that of a nice, carefully-chaperoned southern girl. The characters are as widely diverse as the costumes; you simply pay your money and take your choice.

JUNE MATHIS SETS PACE FOR WRITERS.

June Mathis, head of Metro's scenario department, has hung up a record for other scenarists to shoot at during her ten weeks in California at Metro's Hollywood studios, whence she migrated from New York. In two months and a half Miss Mathis has completed three continuities, one of seven reels and the others five-part programme features; has titled six productions for four different stars; has imparted the feminine touch to two pictures in course of production, and has gone through a mass of books and original stories as head of her department.

Aside from this, she has had nothing to do except her Christmas shopping and buying a couple of new gowns and three new hats, pursuing the beauty chase at the manicurist's and hairdresser's, and looking at all the new screen productions, both those worth while and those not worth while.

WEEPS AND WEEPS; WILL BE SOME ACTOR.

He is 5 years old, his name is Wong Bak Kee, and he has a weeping part in "The Red Lantern," the forthcoming Nazimova production in which Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger present the Russian star. And little Wong Bak, or little Kee, since Chinese last names come first, can cry for an hour and a half without the aid of glycerine and without even coming up for air.

Albert Capellani, Nazimova's director at the Metro studios, wanted Wong Bak Kee to cry for a close-up. The boy wouldn't. Then several of the score of pretty Chinese girls working on the set proceeded

HOLIDAY OFFERINGS.

PLAYS, PICTURES AND VAUDEVILLE OF THE WEEK.

Orpheum.

Welcoming in 1919, the peace year, the Orpheum is going to start something by offering nine great acts in its New Year's show, beginning Monday matinee, December 30. This is one extra thrown in for good measure, but the quality of all are of the usual high standard. Two headline numbers are provided. Maud Lambert, the musical comedy star, and Ernest R. Ball, the composer, appear together. The other headline act is presented by Lawrence Grant and company and is called, "Efficiency." It is a most unusual one-act drama. "An Artistic Treat" portrays, by means of living male and female models, the best-known sculpture of Paris. Landers brothers have "Pills for Ills." Harry Laughlin and Clara West have a pretty girl, song and patter act. "A Wedding Day in Dogland" is that very clever act worked out by E. Merian. Bennett & Richards, in "Dark Clouds;" Walter Brower, the jolly jester, and Helen Trix and sister Josephine remain over.

Grauman's.

Beginning tomorrow and playing for one week, Grauman's will offer "Little Women," a screen adaptation of Louisa May Alcott's celebrated book by the same name. The story, from which this ingeniously cast Paramount-Artcraft special screen production has been taken, is possibly one of the best known of the modern books and the most extensively read over the world, statistics showing that it has been translated into more languages than have the works of Dickens, with over 2,000,000 copies sold up to the year 1913, at which time the stage version was introduced with phenomenal success. The film is correct in detail, the filming being done in and about the Alcott family home at Concord, N. H.

Quinn's Rialto.

Absolute sincerity and truth to life are the keynotes of "The Turn in the Road," the new feature picture produced by the Brentwood, from the story and direction of King W. Vidor, and shown today for the first time at Quinn's Rialto.

The characters in this intensely appealing story, as well as their passions, troubles, joys and problems, are such as the majority of men, women and children in every audience will have intimately known or will have been closely concerned with. Helen Jerome Eddy appears in the role of June, a self-sacrificing,

WHAT NEXT? ASK GRIFFITH.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

What is David Wark Griffith going to do next?

Every once in so often the stream of motion-picture production, running along calm as a summer brook, breaks with a swish, splash, into a little whirlpool of excitement. Directors and actors whisper, and the news hounds sharpen up their pencils and romp round to see what it's all about.

"What's D. W. got up his sleeve?" we ask, feeling a new Griffith picture coming on.

Because the great point is, you see, no matter how well others do things, Mr. Griffith has a habit of always thinking of those things first!

And now, even while other directors are blowing up papier-mache bridges and setting off fire crackers in the trenches, D. W. Griffith announces he won't make any more war pictures!

"War pictures are dead for the time being," said Mr. Griffith the other day. "Five years from now, perhaps, when we shall have a fresh perspective on the world struggle, yes—but not now."

"But how about pictures dealing with after-the-war problems?

"Ah, that's different!"

Which reminds us—

It is rumored Mr. Griffith is shortly to go to Europe to make a picture based on reconstruction and the present plight of nations, with mayhap an international love story. One can imagine the tremendous human appeal the world's master director would put into such a tale. On this, however, Mr. Griffith refused to commit himself.

"Oh, I may go some time," he evaded.

While nobody could have foreseen that the powers that be would suddenly hold up their hands like a traffic cop, as they did, and stop the war; still, Griffith's strong good sense—and what is genius, after all, except good sense and keen perception, plus the golden gift of imagination?—prompted him to intersperse his war pictures with others of a different nature. So he made "Romance of Happy Valley," an idyll of the South, with no battle stuff

MUSICAL.

CLUNE'S CELEBRATION.

SUITABLE MUSIC FOR SEASON TO BE GIVEN.

By Jeanne Redman.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra has always been disposed in favor of local musicians. Looking over the twenty-one years of the life of the orchestra, one finds in its record dozens of performances of works by Los Angeles composers. This season, which is to make its bow next Friday afternoon at Clune's Auditorium, is to be equally generous to local works, two of which will be given, one operatic and the other primarily patriotic. The first is the prelude and intermezzo from Cadman's "Shanewis," performed last season at the Metropolitan Operahouse. This is the first public performance of the orchestral score since that time. The second work is more of a surprise because less heralded and written in the last few weeks. It is a march written by Fannie Dillon, "The Celebration of Victory." It was composed immediately upon receipt of the news of the signing of the armistice and of the dawn of peace. The composition is of modern construction, and melodic throughout. Tickets for the concert will be on sale beginning Monday morning.

PHILHARMONIC AND ITS CHANGE OF DATES.

Elinor Remick Warren,
Youthful composer who will be heard in programme next Saturday.

Owing to the many changes in dates necessitated by the recent epidemic ban, Manager Behymer desires to call the particular attention of Philharmonic subscribers to the following new dates, with the request that the patrons change the dates on the tickets they now hold to these concerts:

Rudolph Ganz (original date November 30,) Saturday matinee February 1; Ethel Leginska (original date November 26,) Tuesday evening, March 4; Louis Graveure (original date April 12,) Tuesday evening, April 1; John McCormack (original date, November 2,) Saturday matinee, May 3; John McCormack (original date November 5,) Tuesday evening, May 6; John McCormack (original date November 7,) Thursday evening, May 8.

A midwinter Philharmonic evening series is also announced: This course will permit the patron a choice of seven artists from the following list with the usual season ticket price in vogue (seven concerts for $5, $6, $8 and $10, according to location.)

Lucy Gates and Trio de Lutece (harp, flute and 'cello,) Thursday evening, January 23; Anna Case, American lyric soprano, Tuesday evening, February 23; Ethel Leginski, pianiste, Tuesday evening, March 4; May Peterson, American lyric soprano, Tuesday evening, March 11; Frances Alda, dramatic soprano, Thursday evening, March 20; Louis Graveure, baritone, Tuesday evening, April 1, and Mabel Garrison, the distinguished American coloratura soprano, Tuesday evening, April 15; John McCormack in May, and Sophie Braslau, contralto, May 13.

The matinee Philharmonic course, which has proven so popular year after year, will be opened by Lucy Gates and the Trio de Lutece on Saturday afternoon, January 25; Rudolph Ganz, pianiste, Saturday afternoon, February 1; Yvette Guilbert, the distinguished representative of a unique phase of French art, Saturday, February 8; Louis Graveure, baritone, Saturday, April 5; Mabel Garrison, coloratura soprano, Saturday, April 19, and John McCormack, tenor, afternoon May 3.

For the benefit of the vocal student and teacher it is announced that a choice of seven concerts may be made from the following list of names: Lucy Gates and Trio de Lutece, Anna Case, May Peterson, Frances Alda, Louis Graveure, Mabel Garrison, John McCormack and Sophie Braslau, the American contralto.

The Trinity box office will be reopened after the holidays, on Thursday morning, January 2, for one week, during which time Philharmonic patrons may exchange their Fitziu-de Segurola and Mero-Murphy tickets for artists scheduled for the spring. With the exception of these two groups, all dates have been rearranged as per above schedule.

Young Composer to Give a Programme.

Elinor Remick Warren, only child of Mr. and Mrs. James Garfield Warren of Andrews boulevard, began to play the piano at 5 years of age. She studied seriously piano and harmony with Mrs. Meserve and Gertrude Ross, and then began to compose songs, many of which have been sung by well-known artists, Ruth Hutchinson, Harry Clifford Lott, Margaret Goetz, Helen Fenner and Mrs. Ina Ryder. She has a number of piano pieces published and many songs, the last, "A Song of June," is being published by Schirmer of New York.

Miss Warren graduated from Westlake School for Girls last June, when some of her compositions were sung with success. They have distinct musical worth, and she is starting out at 18 as a composer of great promise.

FATHER OF "MA MACHREE."

In a charming country home on the picturesque north shore of Long Island are written some of the greatest song successes America has ever enjoyed. In this delightful corner of the world, among the trees and near the water, conveniently adjacent to the greatest city in the world, live Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Ball, better known to the vaudeville world as Ernest R. Ball and Maud Lambert.

Mr. Ball is the composer of more real song successes of a popular character than any writer alive, and he is still going strong as ever. His ability as an entertainer is as conspicuous as are his gifts for writing songs that the public like. In these two capacities he is not only one of the most successful examples that America has produced, but is probably better known to more people than anybody who today is writing songs and singing them in public. His engaging personality is familiar to millions, and the millions more who have never seen him know and admire him for the long succession of splendid songs he has given the world, all the way down from "Love Me and the World is Mine" and "Mother Machree" to such present-day hits as those which he is now making song history with—such, for instance, as "Till I'm Called by the Master Above" and "They Can't Beat Us."

Mr. Ball is a hard worker. He has to be. But he finds time in season for sufficient outdoor recreation to keep him in the pink of condition for writing and entertaining. He is a great baseball enthusiast and would rather talk and play golf than discuss his musical successes. Born in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1878, he led an uneventful life, teaching piano and other unexciting duties, until fifteen years ago, when he started writing what is declared to be the most extraordinary and uninterruptedly successful series of popular and standard songs that one writer has ever achieved.

Fortunately, there is no one able to demonstrate more delightfully the excellencies of his songs than the writer of them himself, assisted by his accomplished and versatile partner—a partner in every sense of the word.

Our Reckless Matches.

Unnecessary and criminal fires cost the people of this country a roughly estimated sum of $300,000,000 annually. The War Industries Board believes that a large part of this destruction can be avoided. Individual watchfulness is being urged upon every citizen.

The last accurate figures, those of 1913, show a fire loss of $250,000,000. War years have seen a tremendous increase. It is regarded as probable that much of the increase is due to enemy activity. However that may be it is true that more than 1500 buildings, enough to provide habitation for a city of 10,000 persons, are damaged by fire each day in the United States. It is known that more than one-half of this loss is due to negligence.

The increase of 1916 over 1915 is calculated into the millions and the report for 1917, already indicative of another tremendous increase, will not be ready for the public for several months yet.

It is suggested that inasmuch as we have made great strides in all other avenues of conservation we cannot fail to take a precaution which may eliminate much of the waste we are endeavoring to offset in our other savings. It is poor economy to save $300,000,000 a year in food and fuel conservation and straightaway see that same sum destroyed by fire when by simple care we might avoid it.

Employers and managers of large manufacturing plants should make it their business to educate their people into the habit of care in handling inflammables. A match may touch off a million-dollar plant. —[Chicago Tribune.

Cardinal Mercier's Offense.

Cardinal Mercier, archbishop of Malines, Belgium, was not actually imprisoned by the Germans, but his freedom was restricted. His offense was the issuing of a pastoral letter to his people in January, 1915, in which he said: "I have gone through most of the places in my diocese which have been wasted. . . . What I have seen of the ruins and the ashes passes anything that, in spite of my most acute fears, I could ever have imagined. . . . Churches, schools, charitable institutions, hospitals, convents, to a considerable number, are unfit for use or are in ruins. Whole villages have almost disappeared. . . . God will save Belgium, my brothers, we cannot doubt it. Let us say, rather, He is saving her. Is there a single patriot who does not feel that glory has come to Belgium? Which of us would have the courage to tear out the last page of our history? Which of us can look without pride on the splendor of the glory that our murdered country has won?"—[Indianapolis News.

Parliamentary Periods.

The maximum duration of a British Parliament, formerly seven years, is now five. The so-called long Parliament of Cromwell's time lasted from November 3, 1640, until April 20, 1653. During Queen Victoria's reign eight parliaments lasted over five years and two over six years. ably restricts the right of suffrage, and only about one-sixth of the people are voters. All clergymen of the Church of England, ministers of the Church of Scotland and Roman Catholic clergymen are disqualified from sitting as members of the House of Commons. This provision of the law only applies to the clergy. —[Indianapolis News.

Music for All Occasions.

Until Aunt May came to her house to visit, eight-year-old Marian cried for everything she wanted. Aunt May with the intention of curing her niece formed the habit of singing (as Marian wept.) "Don't cry, little girl, don't cry, etc." All to Marian's disgust.

One night when father was fussy, Auntie proved that there was a song to suit him. Sweetly she sang. "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag and smile, smile, smile.

A few nights later a bachelor of very uncertain age came to call on Aunt May. Auntie was very happy until suddenly from the next room victrola came—

"Darling, I Am Growing Old."

Marian had seized her chance to prove that there were songs for all occasions.—[Indianapolis News.

One Week Starting Today

ONCE IN A DECADE there is given to the world a drama so powerful, so absorbing, so inherently gripping that it strikes the shackles of limitation from the Art of the Screen and looms large like a beacon in the night—a torch from which the flames of genius rise, lighting the way to realms heretofore unexplored—a drama inspired in its conception, sublime in its creation, exalted in its interpretation—in short, 100 per cent. perfect—such as

"THE HEART OF RACHAEL"
From the Novel by Kathleen Norris
Starring Winsome
BESSIE BARRISCALE

Just as Mr. D. W. Griffith gave to the screen the "close-up" and the "cut-back," so does this master film introduce another innovation of as great value which is certain to be universally adopted.

Now come one, all you press critics and you picture fans! If you can find one tiny flaw in this production, or if you can show me where it falls short of being a "knockout," I'll buy you a Ford. EDWARD TRUTHFUL HOLLAND, Manager.

Peg o' Los Angeles goes buying

The military effect will still be noticed in the spring styles.

When you really consider the exceptional quality of the furs of Liebec & Co., famous the world over—you will be overjoyed to learn that they will offer their wonderful line of marvelous creations at greatly-reduced prices this week, just for a New Year's treat, you know. They have their own trading posts in the Arctic regions, and select the finest pelts for your adornment. Their skilled designers are busily thinking up new wonders, and you will find the most original and individual creations at their shop, 725 S. Hill.

Many high-collared dresses leave the chest bare.

Carrol Halloway will gladly vouch for the wonderful work done by Mrs. Hudgen in permanently waving her beautiful blond hair! Mrs. Hudgen has two new machines of the latest model, using patented steam pads to protect the hair. You can have large or small waves. She has had seven years' experience and is the only woman in the city with a diploma. Brack-Shops, 9th floor. Phone 14417.

Superfluous hair is permanently removed by the Follicide method, which can be used successfully at home. Best of references. Bring this notice for a free demonstration. Eyebrows and eyelashes are dyed without injury to the eyes at the Follicide Shop, 822 West Seventh street. Main 647.

Everything separate is the fashion in Paris.

That real French modiste, Mme. Seliler, offers special prices before the spring rush. She makes mannish tailored suits and lovely evening frocks as well. See her at 606 Brockman Bldg. Her work is exquisite.

That cross-fox is a beauty! Yes, it's included in the special prices this week at Ormond's Fur Shop, 728 W. Seventh. So is that coatee of ermine and taupe squirrel a thing of beauty! They have a lot of smart neck pieces made from one or two skins—the smartest things! All of these furs are of extraordinary fine quality.

Some new hats have irregular outlines.

The semi-annual half-price sale is on at the Style Center, 713 S. Broadway! And I do wish you would see these modish suits, coats and dresses—you'll be astonished at the values! This store is so popular because they show such clever things—such youthful styles. Some of the frocks I saw there were simply adorable and as for the coats and suits—go see for yourselves!

Very chic are those blouses on sale at Robinson's Monday and Tuesday! Such beauties in Georgette and crepe de chine, with frills, too! The tailored waists of tub silk and pussy willow are smart as can be—and you should see the lovely ones of organdy! The best part of it is, they will all be sold at $3.95.

"Buronette" is a new fabric which has fringe as a part of it.

Why be fat? Take it off where you wish and have the figure of a Hebe without effort, diet or drugs! Relieves rheumatism and constipation. Improves circulation. Weight Reducing Co., 618 Brockman Bldg.

It's really true, my dear! That most exclusive shop—Mandel's—will close out their entire stock of clever hats Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. You can scarcely believe it, I know, but the prices will be $5, $7.50 and $10, and such values! They are at 733 S. Hill, next to the Alhambra Theater.

A delicious dinner will be served New Year's night from 5 to 7 for $1.50, at that charming Mary Louise Top Tea Room, Brack Shops. Please reserve tables. The regular Thursday night dinner will also be served.

I saw the loveliest tree dahlias, twelve feet tall, with large lavender flowers five inches in diameter! Aggeler & Musser have only 100 bulbs of these dahlias, which they are offering at only 25 cents each at their new store, 620 S. Spring.

Gold and silver embroidery trims soft satin gowns.

Marabout Capes and Ostrich feather fancies are the last word for the new season. If you cannot afford new ones then have your old ones remodeled and dyed the new shades. Take them to Vallely & Vatcher, 640 Broadway, sixth floor, opposite Bullocks. They are showing all the latest designs.

The soldiers' overcoats are so nifty—and as the government has decided to allow the boys to keep their outfits—why not have the coats dyed at the Cooper Dye Works? They are having great success dyeing them navy blue and black! The price is very reasonable for this work. Phone 25109 or call at 1369 W. Washington.

Street coats will be shorter for spring.

Every woman loves a tub dress, and those Williams-Wear frocks are as cute and comfy as can be! Sold at the Specialty Shop, 734 S. Hill.

Do you know the "Little Dearies?" They are found at that quaint shop of Gerrie Gail's—they'll enchant you. So will the "Sleepies" and the darling little frocks for girlies, some of gingham, others of crepe de chine and Georgette. Real party frocks! They are the daintiest and most original things imaginable. Hand-made, and hand-embroidered, too! 608 Title Guarantee Bldg., Fifth and Broadway.

The new lining material, a figured voile, is called "Tymbad."

"A New Year's greeting to you all!" says L. Lipson, the ladies' tailor. He will make extremely clever suits and coats for $45, $50 and $55, saving you from 15 per cent. up! You can choose from his large stock—serge, tricotine, gabardine, Poiret twill, mannish English tweeds and many other beautiful fabrics which will be worn both for winter and spring. 204 Brockman Bldg., over New York Store. Phone 15542.

The Beverly Hills Hotel will serve a wonderful dinner New Year's Eve and two on New Year's Day, at noon and evening also, at $3 a plate! Guests may also enjoy a dance on New Year's Eve, beginning at 9:30, with a buffet supper served at midnight! There's a jolly time in store for all who attend, as they know how to make guests feel at home.

Smart evening frocks are plain and draped from the shoulder.

Start the new year right with a box of Aileen's chocolates, 75c to $1.50 a pound. Assorted, $1 a pound. Brack-Shops, Fourth Floor. Dainty luncheons and delicious dinners!

Mr. Johnson, photographer, has an ideal new studio for photographing children—it's his specialty. Phone 61414. Sixth floor Title Guarantee Bldg., Fifth and Broadway.

New hats show bent-in crowns.

John Klein, Furrier, Broadway at Eighth, is so well known that to say he is selling all of his extremely fine furs at one-third off is the only incentive you need to hie yourself right up there to buy that fur you've been wishing for. They are so cleverly designed and so smart that you'll never regret buying one—especially when you can get it at one-third off! You'll be delighted with their beautiful foxes, too. They have such a large assortment in all the newest shades.

For New Year's parties miladi loves new and fascinating accessories. Why not a dainty vanity or opera bag of ostrich feathers or mayhap a gorgeous fan? The marabout capes and scarfs are very popular, indeed. These and many other delightful novelties are made in any color at the Cawston Ostrich Farm in South Pasadena. Ostrich feather fringe for miladi's negligee or evening gown is quite the modish thing. They also remodel marabout pieces and "Cawstonize" your old plumes. The shop at 723 S. Broadway displays many lovely creations. You should visit the Farm and see the hundreds of ostriches!

Collars on some new gowns reach almost to the ears!

Why not deliver your own garments for cleaning and dyeing and thus take advantage of the great reduction in prices at the Tabbert Dye Works, 1223-27 W. Washington, between Hoover and Burlington? Phones, West 536 and 24036. Mail orders are given prompt attention.

Harriet Hunter's permanent shop is very popular, indeed. You know she has a machine which makes six various sized waves by a patent steam pad process which protects the scalp and hair. The waves are guaranteed to last six months. She'll also "camouflage" your gray hair with harmless Neos henna! 728 Brockman Bldg. Main 526.

Skirts are narrower and slashed at hem.

She makes no friz or kinks, but large natural waves with her new 1919 model machine which does the work in half the time! Mrs. A. L. Barber, Beauty Specialist, 5th floor Brack-Shops, assures you that the permanent wave will not injure the hair or scalp. You will certainly feel repaid if you have it done, for it's such a saving of time! She's curled for lots of children and they don't mind it one bit. Phone 19985.

Charming drapery materials are found at Beeman & Hendee's, 948 S. Hill. They make plain curtains free. Dainty and original are their Polly Primrose frocks and rompers. You should see those happy-faced dolls!

Waistcoats of leather are smart for sport wear.

Lip reading is such a help to those troubled with their hearing! Miss Anderson gives private consultations free at the Pacific Coast School of Lip Reading, 603 Citizens National Bank Bldg.

Transparent and silk hats are among the smart things to be shown at Jack Lane's Monday sale. Every hat in the shop goes at $5. You should really go early, for it's a splendid opportunity to get something clever and it's positively your last chance! You know they are in their bright and beautiful new shop, tenth floor Brack-Shops.

The largest line of yarns on the Coast is carried by the Yarn Shop, 602 Title Guarantee Bldg., 220 West Fifth. They send out samples on request and also send yarns prepaid. Phone 61961.

Cape coats are very smart for schoolgirls.

Little Teas.

Mrs. Howard F. Shepherd (Margaret Pierce,) a last summer's bride, is to furnish the motif for a series of teas throughout the winter to be given by her mother-in-law, Mrs. Bayliss F. Shepherd of No. 400 South Hoover street.

The first of these gay little assemblages was held yesterday and was a notably happy event because Mrs. Bayliss Shepherd had an opportunity to meet friends once more after a year's absence spent in Colorado Springs, her old home and in the East. The younger Mrs. Shepherd is a Santa Monica girl and will find opportunity in these jolly teas to meet a great many of the family's friends.

Among some of those at yesterday's affairs were Capt. and Mrs. James H. French, Miss Mary Scott, Miss Dorothea Whitnah, Miss Katherine Torrance, Miss Marie McCoy, Mrs. Edwin L. Stanton, Miss Mary McMillan, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller (Helen Candler,) Miss Margaret Mae Johnston, Miss Florence Johnston and several Pasadena girls, besides a group of young army officers.

—o—

Dinner-Dance.

Quite a number of Los Angeles and Pasadena folk, long shut-ins because of the influenza, are looking forward to the dinner-dance to be given at the Annandale Golf Club New Year's Eve and many really brilliant parties are expected to mark the affair.

—o—

Christmas Tea.

Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Douglass presided over a lovely tea party at the Hotel Alexandria yesterday, arranged by her as a bit of Christmas cheer to half a hundred friends. Assisting were Mrs. Matthew Robertson and Mrs. J. B. Alexander. The tables were beautifully decked with potted maidenhair ferns and spring blossoms.

Some of those who enjoyed Mrs. Douglass's charming hospitality were Miss Helen Ardrey of Dallas, Tex.; Mrs. G. E. Moore of Toledo; Mrs. C. S. Selden and Miss Selden of Baltimore; Mrs. A. Denevan of Sydney, Australia; Mrs. J. D. Stearns of Toledo and Mrs. Fred Hooker Jones, Mrs. Cecelia White, Mrs. C. Q. Stanton, Mrs. J. P. Burns, Mrs. J. T. Fitzgerald, Mrs. W. I. Hollingsworth, Mrs. Hancock Johnston, Mrs. J. J. Aken, Mrs. Mary Sardie, Miss Florence Sommers, Mrs. J. E. Ellison, Mrs. W. M. Alexander, Mrs. W. B. Scarborough, Mrs. W. L. Bretherton, Mrs. S. C. Dunlap, Mrs. Charles R. Thomas, Miss Valentine Hernandez, Mrs. L. D. Barrar, Mrs. Bell, Mrs. R. M. Bishop, Mrs. A. W. Tree, and Mrs. William Jerome Toomey.

John B. Miller, Jr.

A large circle of friends will learn with interest that John B. Miller, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Miller of Pasadena and Los Angeles, received his commission as ensign in the U. S. Naval Reserve on Wednesday last.

Ensign Miller is the youngest in a class of 109, but graduated ninth. The first ten were named from the platform as honor men and the first twenty will be assigned to ships and the others on inactive duty. It is believed that Ensign Miller will be assigned in command of a submarine chaser in the Fifth Naval Reserve District at Norfolk, Va.

By Mr. and Mrs. Taylor.

Assembling a few old friends to again greet their brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Clarke, who are here for the winter from Peoria, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. Russell McD. Taylor entertained at dinner Christmas Day. There were plates for the home-comers and for Mr. and Mrs. Chauncy Clark, Mrs. Rankin, Mrs. W. H. Benham, Mrs. L. Burrell, Mrs. Barbee Hook, Jay Wilkinson, James Long and Edward Ortman. The homecoming of Mrs. Taylor's son, Clark Keeley, added much pleasure to the family gathering as he has been away at Hotchkis School in Connecticut.

He was the incentive for a dinner party last evening at which Mrs. Taylor entertained thirty members of the sub-debutante set. Following the dinner moving pictures were shown. He will return to school the day after New Year's.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke have taken the William G. Hutchison home at No. 699 South New Hampshire street. Mrs. Clarke was formerly Miss Cora Goodrich, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Ben Goodrich, and was a belle of a decade ago. Friends are planning a merry round of festivities in honor of her return.

Mrs. Barbee Hook is to give a dinner party in their honor on the evening of January 4 and Mrs. Taylor will entertain a house party at the Crags Country Club for them, beginning January 11.

The Hutchisons are to pass some time at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach, and at Coronado, going later to Honolulu and then East.

—o—

From San Diego.

Maj. and Mrs. George Derby Holland, here from San Diego and house guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Jerome Toomey, were hosts at a dinner-dance at the Hotel Alexandria on Friday evening, having some forty guests. They were complimented at a Christmas dinner party by Mr. and Mrs. Toomey, who entertained a company of twenty.

By Mrs. Wing.

Mrs. Horace B. Wing will entertain at dinner at noon today in compliment to Col. and Mrs. Van Orsdale, who have just come here from the East. They have taken a house at Beverly Hills, and will be a welcome addition to society, especially in the army set. Col. Orsdale is a West Point man.

Mrs. Wing's other guests will be Dr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson of Chicago, Miss Laura Smith, Alfred Allen and Wayland Smith. Dr. Johnson is a son of the late famous tuberculosis specialist.

—o—

War Romance.

A charming bit of news from overseas that is calculated to cause a good deal of interest is the announcement of the marriage in Paris last week of Miss Leslie Page of San Francisco and Lieut. Donald Armstrong of Riverside. Both young folks are well known in exclusive circles here, as well as up and down the Coast, the two belonging to wealthy and prominent families.

Lieut. Armstrong is a dashing young aviator, who has seen distinguished service, and his bride, who went over the early part of the war, also distinguished herself in the cause of mercy with the Red Cross as a nurse.

By Mr. and Mrs. Neal.

Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Neal of No. 522 South Van Ness avenue entertained at dinner on Wednesday. The house was bright and cheery, with holly and mistletoe and a Christmas tree loaded with gifts. The dinner was planned for the family, which included Mrs. J. G. Ambrose, Mrs. J. F. Young and Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Neal.

—o—

Christmas Welcome.

Miss Marjorie Riley, who has just returned after a year's absence in San Francisco, was given a charming Christmas welcome, a reception being given and open house kept by Dr. and Mrs. Frank A. Riley, No. 1825 North Bronson street. Twenty guests were in the house party. There was a large Christmas tree, music and private theatricals. During her absence Miss Riley has taken leading parts in many private theatricals and has been continuing her work as a classic dancer.

—o—

Dinner and Christmas Tree.

Miss Casie Reed of No. 229 South Mariposa avenue was hostess at a jolly Christmas dinner party and tree for a dozen kiddies Wednesday. On the tree, which was all dressed up in Yuletide finery, were just the gifts and the kind of candy each tot wanted. Mrs. A. Grant Goucer sang and Miss Ruth Thompson was at the piano. Dr. and Mrs. Harry Peet Reed assisted their daughter.

—o—

Engagement Announced.

At a happy Christmas party at which Miss Ruth Hensler and Miss Ilo Smith of No. 2300 Scarff street entertained members of their sorority on Christmas Day, announcement of Miss Hensler's engagement to Mr. Frances Merrilees of Engelmine, Cal., added quite a bit of zest to the occasion. Mr. Merrilees is assistant manager of the Engels Copper Mining Company. He and Miss Hensler met at the home of her mother, Mrs. M. Hensler, at a Christmas party two years ago. On last Christmas they became engaged. They have set the wedding date for June.

Among the guests at the party were the following members of the Gamma Tau Delta Fraternity: Misses Grace Hedrick, Helen Root, Marguerite and Myrtle Mimmer, Hortense Monlux, Mildred Sprague, Olga Orth, Lucy Smith, Lucille Norris, Josephine Hamlin, Belle and Fleta Smith and Mmes. M. Baumgardt, Harry Chapman, Will Jepson and B. Lee.

—o—

Engagement Told.

A bit of interesting news was made known in the announcement of the engagement of Miss Mary Louise Ewins of Los Angeles and Lieut. Clemens E. McNamara of Kansas City.

Miss Ewins is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Ewins of Serrano street and graduated from a girls' school in Kansas City and also at Marlborough. Lieut. McNamara is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. McNamara of Kansas City and has been stationed at Fort Sill, Okla.

Last evening Miss Ewins and her fiance were guests of honor at dinner at the Los Angeles Country Club, their hostess being Miss Alma Barman. Lieut. J. Hazaler was also a guest.

—o—

At Hotel Virginia.

The New Year's Eve dinner-dance at Hotel Virginia is to attract a large number of Los Angeles society folk, if plans now being talked about are carried out. The Christmas luncheon and dinner was a gay affair and drew many folks to the beach. Seven hundred dinner and luncheon reservations were made. Among prominent folks who gave parties were Mrs. Henry Clay French, Mrs. Charles Rivers Drake, who had a party of twelve; Capt. and Mrs. P. H. Uberoth, Capt. Earl Daugherty, Lieut. and Mrs. John Mel, Capt.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY.

PASADENA.

Opening of two of the big winter hotels for what promises to be a gay season, the arrival of the Great Lakes and Marines football squads and the holiday homecoming of many soldiers, sailors and crowds of visiting tourists, has put more "pep" into social life of Pasadena than has been prevalent for some time. The winter colony has been considerably augmented by new arrivals, consequent upon the opening of the Huntington and the Raymond, as well as by the arrival of many families who have their own winter homes here.

The opening of the Raymond Hotel Thursday night was marked by many festive dinner parties. Many sojourners at other hotels, as well as prominent citizens of Pasadena and South Pasadena, joined the guests at dinner on the opening night, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Raymond receiving the guests. During dinner and at a concert afterward an orchestra composed of members of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra played. Dancing followed in the ballroom.

The Mare Island Marines football squad is quartered at the Raymond, arriving Friday morning from San Francisco, where the eleven defeated Balboa Christmas Day. The Great Lakes Naval Training Station eleven, which will meet the Marines at Tournament Park New Year's Day, is quartered at the Maryland. Both elevens have been the objects of much interest from hotel guests and townspeople, but the regulations of the training officers have precluded any social affairs for the men before the big game.

The Hotel Huntington, in Oak Knoll, opened for the season Friday, but the occasion was not marked by any social festivities. The formal opening dinner-dance and ball, which is one of the brilliant social events of the winter season, will be held at a date in early January to be announced later.

There was much interest among the younger social set here in the wedding of Miss Mary Hale, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George E. Hale, and Lieut. Paul Scherer, which took place at the Hales apartment in Washington, D. C., Christmas Day. Their betrothal was announced some time ago by Dr. and Mrs. Hale in Washington, where Dr. Hale has been engaged in war work as chairman of the scientific research council of the Council of National Defense. Dr. Hale, as is well known, is director of the Mt. Wilson solar observatory and one of the best known scientists in America. Lieut. Scherer is the son of President and Mrs. James A. B. Scherer of Throop College of Technology, so the wedding links two of the most prominent families in Southern California. Lieut. Scherer served with distinction aboard a destroyer in the Atlantic U-boat zone for many months and was promoted from ensign to lieutenant. He was recently transferred to one of the new destroyers on the Pacific fleet.

Miss Cliffe E. Witter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Witter, No. 346 East Orange Grove avenue, was married at her parents' home Christmas Day to Harlan G. Mills, son of Mrs. C. L. Mills of San Marino. Mr. Mills is a member of the Naval Reserve force at San Pedro, but is expecting his return to civil life shortly. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. James H. Lash of Hollywood. Mr. and Mrs. Mills will make their home in San Marino.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clay Myers, No. 1298 Garfield avenue, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Christmas Day by entertaining a group of friends at a dinner party. Mr. and Mrs. Myers were married fifty years ago in Rockford, Ill. They later moved to Iowa, from which State they came to Pasadena a number of years ago.

There will be dancing at Hotel Maryland both New Year's Eve and New Year's night. The Rose Tournament Association has decided at the last moment not to hold the annual Tournament ball the night of January 1, as has been the custom in the past, but the hotel itself will have a dance for guests and their friends. The regular week-end dances are being held every Saturday evening now.

MONROVIA.

Dr. and Mrs. S. E. Salisbury entertained on Friday evening a number of friends who are interested in making a stamp collection. BITS OF VERSE.

A Child's Thought.

When all the magic spirits of the rain
Tap somberly upon my window pane,
And all is still and dark, I softly pray
For other children, ah, so far away,
In saddened Belgium and in France—alone,
Orphaned and hungry; and the wind's drear tone
Seems like their little voices calling me
Across the great expanse of earth and sea.
I shall do all I can to sow the seed
Of joy within their hearts—supply their need.
Their tears, their hungry grief I understand,
As, safe and loved, I touch my mother's hand.
—[Eleanor Johnson, in St. Nicholas.

New Watch on the Rhine.

There's a new watch on the Rhine,
A lank, lean-visaged man,
Well knit and straight
And brisk of gait—
Each inch American.

There's a new flag on the Rhine,
Red, white and blue, with stars,
Without a smack
Of pirate black;
Just Freedom's glorious bars.

There's a new song on the Rhine.
"My Country, 'Tis of Three,"
A chorus grand
Enthrills the land,
Our hymn of Liberty.

There's a new watch on the Rhine,
White-souled American—
"Come, be ye free"—
Wide flings his plea
To the brotherhood of man.
—[New York Sun.

Morning!

Morning to the old world—
The top of it to you!
Miles and miles of sunny smiles—
You're sure made over new!
Morning!—in the highest—
The top of it to you!

Morning to the old world!
You're sure on dress review!
The storm is past,
Heaven's peace at last
From windows of the blue!
Morning!—in the highest—
The top of it to you!
—[Frank L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

A Fondeau.

My garden hose, though nearly new,
Already shows a break or two;
I've had it but about a week,
And now it's gone and sprung a leak!
I'm sure I don't know what to do.

Of rakes and hoes I had a few,
But they've been stolen. Wonder who Could be so horrid as to take
My garden hose.

I like to be well dressed, 'tis true,
But briers tear silken stockings—pooh!
Though I am patient-souled and meek,
I can't keep up this gardening freak—
These short skirts so expose to view
My garden hose!
—[Carolyn Wells, in Saturday Evening Post.

Peace.

(November 11, 1918.)

Peace, battle-worn and starved, and gaunt, and pale,
Rises like mist upon a storm-swept shore,
Rises from out the blood-stained fields and bows her head,
Blessing the passionate dead
Who gladly died that she might live for evermore.

Unheeding generations come and go,
And careless men and women will forget,
Caught in the whirling loom whose tapestried Today
Flings Yesterday away,
And covers up the crimsoned west whose sun has set.

But faithful ghosts, like shepherds, will return
To call the flocking shades and break with them
Love-bread, and Peace will clasp them to her breast and weep.
And deathless vigil keep.
Yea, Peace, while worlds endure, will sing their requiem.
—[G. O. Warren in Boston Transcript.

Rejoicing.

A pretty maiden blew it at my car—
The gaudy horn, all red and white and blue,
"Toot-te-ta-toot!" and it was good to hear,
Although it nearly pierced my ear-drum through.

The small tin horn the laughing maiden held
Well symbolized the joy of all mankind;
Its "toot-ta-toot!" that rose and shrilled and swelled
Sang "Black old trouble's gone, blown down the wind."

And as she blew with all her lusty breath,
I caught the gladsome vision in her eyes;
She saw her soldier coming back from death,
And lover's sunshine lit her happy skies.
The victory was fine, the girl was dear,
The small tin horn was strong and brave to blow;
Yet, still and all, it rather hurt my ear,
Because I had been thought too old to go.
—[O. C. A. Child in New York World.

OREGON POLITICIANS OPPOSE SIMPLIFYING.

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSITION FOR REGROUPING OF OFFICES HAS NO CHANCE.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SALEM, Dec. 18.—The Legislature of Oregon will convene January 13, 1919, for a session to last not more than forty days. The Governor is privileged to call a special session of not to exceed twenty days, at any time within the biennial period, but this has seldom been done in the history of the State.

Little legislation of importance has been forecast for the coming session, and nothing of a partisan nature can well raise an issue. Seventy-nine Republicans, nine Democrats and two independents will make up the Legislature. Prohibition will not be an issue, in any form, it is predicted.

With Oregon definitely in the bone dry column, the ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment is expected to be made without a battle of any consequence.

A proposition to simplify the State government by doing away with a large number of offices and a regrouping of the duties of others, is to be reported upon to the Legislature by a committee appointed two years ago, and interest may center in the consideration of this plan, which, however, is not conceded to have much chance of adoption. The radical nature of the changes suggested and the large number of office holders affected will work against its chances of success, according to political prophets.

CHICAGO SENDS ALLIES MILLION TONS FOOD.

SHIPMENTS INCLUDE CEREALS, FRESH CURED, CANNED MEATS, LIVE STOCK.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—Chicago, representative of the Middle West, to which the world has looked for its provisions, has had a great share in victualing peoples and armies during the four years of the war, and in that period an enormous amount of provisions has passed through the Chicago gateway.

With the 1918 shipments, there has been shipped from Chicago more than 40,000,000 tons of cereals.

In the same period the meat shipments, according to the Drover's Trade Journal, including cured, canned and fresh meats, amounted to more than 6,000,000 tons.

Fats, including lard, butter and cheese, totaled more than 1,800,000 tons.

In addition to grains, meats and fats, 20,415,000 bushels of potatoes were handled out of Chicago, and 5,973,891 livehogs, 3,587,415 head of cattle and 4,166,570 sheep were shipped.

Prior to the spring of 1917, the usual agencies of trade conducted the distribution of the vast quantities of foodstuffs sent out of Chicago, and contracts for provisions were made by foreign governments direct with the dealers in Chicago. With the entrance of America into the war, the Food Administration, through its various branches, took over the handling of provisions in quantity and the distribution was conducted under governmental supervision.

Stepping Stones

A New Year's Message from the "California"

1918 has been a wonderfully gratifying year to the "California." To us it has been an opportunity to test the steadfastness of our ideals. To you it has presented opportunities to prove the correctness of our inflexible principles of business conduct.

Your very substantial patronage has made us feel that the "California" enjoys an even greater measure of public confidence than ever before. For this expressed confidence we are genuinely appreciative.

And now, standing on the threshold of a New Year, we view the achievements of the past only as stepping stones to a future of greater service and usefulness.

The ambition of the "California" is vastly beyond commercial accomplishments. The guiding ideal of this institution is that it may be a sincerely constructive factor in raising the standard of our American homes, thus contributing to the character of American citizenship.

To this end our conscientious efforts are again pledged—not only in the character of home furnishings we shall offer you, not only in the honest values we shall make available to you, but in the true helpfulness of our home making service to you.

Accept our best wishes for a very Happy and Prosperous New Year.

When Robinson's Has a Sale It IS a Sale

Editorial

Happy New Year

Today an innocent cherub, with 1919 on his grip, looks wonderingly at us from the magazine covers. A wisdom-weary old man with a scythe marked 1918 blindly seeks a way to somewhere.

We all wish the child nineteen a happier life than the aged eighteen has had. But the old man's sturdy sons have made the world a place of promise for the New Year now arriving.

So should we not now resolve to have more faith and less greed in our hearts in order that 1919 may, twelve months hence, walk into the great aeon of history with the firm step and the happy face of peaceful prosperous old age.

We can begin by really wishing a Happy New Year to all the world and then trying to make the wish come true.

THE NEW.

IN STORES AND HOMES.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

By Olive Gray.

Up-to-datest:

Brighter colors are forcing their way into millinery—possibly expressive of the brighter outlook for the world and the more joyous feeling prevalent upon all sides.

Evening clothes are again coming into their own and are more interesting than ever, in view of the their long eclipse.

Wraps for evening and dressy afternoon wear, never relegated to the realm of wartime "forbiddens," have burst forth into even more gorgeousness than heretofore. Luxurious furs, rich silks, satins and velvets are manipulated in wondrous effects to form these garments, which are, after all, the sign-manual of good attire.

Shoes are more than ever pointed, and are builded upon most slender lines. There are fewer vivid contrasts in color, combined in shoes, when two tones are used the shades blending harmoniously and melting into a tasteful ensemble.

Now is the Time to Buy:

Everything needed for the interseason, and all that you wished for Christmas—and failed to receive! The clearance sales and the January offerings combine to render the present moment a money-saving era.

In that huge clearance sale at the big Broadway store which tells throughout eight long pages of its opportunity offerings, garments, millinery, shoes, underthings, household necessities. Christmas money travels far and gathers much in the bargain line, at such sales as these.

Many articles which will spell saving and readiness, for next Christmas. It is wise to make such provisions, even though we may pride ourselves upon indemnity from the usual holiday fever.

Its Saving Grace.

I sometimes wonder just how selfish and "hide bound" we would become were it not for Christmas and New Year's.

The Christmas fever, burning out our selfishness, leads us to give and give, lashing into an almost frenzy of altruism, even the least generous heart. Old Kurmudgeon who would not even consider loaning a nickel to his dearest friend, to defray his car fare when he is footsore, and weary unto dying, will—at Christmas time—reach nimbly into a bulging pocket and bring forth several "bits" to make someone gratuitously happy! At least, the outer skin, wrapping up his selfishness, is cracked at such a time and a ray of kindliness penetrating to his stolid heart warms and tenders it. The Christmas spirit, shining through the piled-up debris of our egotistical provisioning for the future—for that time which never comes, save in fearful foreshadowing—impels a generous outpouring of our money, time and loving thoughtfulness, at the season dedicated to good Saint Nick.

And then, before we have had time to slip back into our habitual selfishness, just in time in fact for us to take a look at our vanishing year's accomplishment or lack of it, and to see ourselves as, at least we seldom do—comes the new year. Time of good resolutions, when we take ourselves by the shoulders, look into our own eyes and deep into our hearts and ask: "Wherein can we become better, bigger, more beneficial to the world?" and if we are truly bent upon following that trail leading to the greater heights, the answer will re-echo throughout the coming year. What if we are unable to live always up to the best which we have New Year's resolved? We have at least made the attempt—and are thereby thus much nearer to that perfection which—however unacknowledged—is the image in every striving soul.

Old Santa Cotton Claus.

Cotton goods, made and unmade-up, will find a place in that big clearance sale where the whitest of whities will join together in holiday revelry. And the prices will be such as to set one thinking that old Santa Claus and Old King Cotton have been united in one grand attempt at giving—bargain giving. After the long held high prices, this event will be welcomed eagerly by buyers.

A Broadway Clearance Will Not Clear Broadway.

That clearance at the big Broadway store which offers great price reductions in all departments, from basement to top floor, will clear stocks there, but what it will do to Broadway will be to block traffic, unless I am far afield in making my guess.

Surprise Table.

That brotherly store on upper Broadway has a new bargain plan for the holiday clearance. One great bargain table will consist of a sort of rummage sale—articles from all sections throughout the store—offered at one price, and that less than a dollar. Something for everyone, and all at a hurryful and just-must-have cost!

"Dollar Silks."

When—oh when have we seen "dollar silks?" Not since before the war! Not dollar silks, in reality, are these; but silks of ever so much greater worth, to sell for a dollar in order to make more emphatic the clearance sale at that store not seventh in popularity. And this but one of the many tempting values, in that big holiday revelry of prices.

And Even Furs!

One of the charms about wearing furs and velvets in our climate is the fact that they are not necessities. In choosing them simbly for the reason that they are becoming and fashionable, the selection becomes a sort of fascinating play. It is only in fancy that we revert to those colder climes where such garmenting is a stern necessity; and this fact renders our furring and our velvetry, a genuine luxury. And that reminds me that even furs are to be found among the clearances—furs of quality, at great price reductions.

Next Season's Boxing.

"I always make it a point," said Agatha—who is the most provisional of all the girls, "to lay in a stock of gifty boxes for the coming season, discovering them at the after holiday clearances and paying for them, but a trifle as compared with the cost at Christmas time." Then she continued: "And this is not all. It does away with much personal friction, in trying to secure such boxes as one needs, by personal scramble at the crowded Christmas counters."

Shown by Fashion's Flashlight.

Narrow bands of skunk are much used as trimming.

Fur-like fringe is so popular for black velvet warps.

Almost all evening gowns have transparent sleeves.

Three-color effects are conspicuous in printed challis.

Hems of angora are frequently seen on dressy frocks.

Aluminum cloth slippers do not tarnish like silvercloth.

Muskrat and gray velour delaine are a good combination.

Taupe continues to appear best in pile fabrics like duvetyne.

The skirt with wings or extensions at the sides is still a favorite for its grace.

Appricot chiffon is quite the smartest material to use in an informal dinner gown.

Small bouquets of hand-made flowers are excellent for gowns of sheer material.

Pale gray net and taupe-colored taffeta combine to make a most fetching afternoon gown.

Three or four interesting beads dangle at the end of a black silk cord, forming an effective neck ornament.

EXTRAORDINARY.

In a house in Panama is a beam of Nazarene wood more than a century old. As it is in a place protected from the sunlight it still has the original bright purple color.

A yellow poplar tree of giant size, which was felled recently in Kentucky, in the hills of the Cumberland Mountains, made nearly 7000 feet of first-class lumber, with several hundred feet of second-class stuff besides.

A mushroom gathered in Lincolnshire, Eng., some years ago, measured a yard in circumference.

William Townsend of Sanford, Me., 70 years old, says he can skin a muskrat in forty seconds, and has skinned eight foxes in forty minutes. One night, he says, he caught twenty muskrats, for which he was paid $1.10 each.

The battleships of today can in two shots discharge as great a weight of metal as an entire broadside of Nelson's greatest ship.

John Burns has escorted 50,000 persons over the houses of Parliament in London. This has entailed his delivering lectures four hours a day.

A Rotherham (Eng.) postman has walked 153,000 miles during his forty-five years of service, and recently celebrated his golden wedding.

A Winlock (Or.) minister, prevented from preaching by the influenza, had his Sunday sermon printed and mailed copies to the members of his flock.

The rooster now twisting as a weathercock on the clock tower of the First National Bank Building in Portland, is 130 years old, his first roosting place having been the top of the old Courthouse in Portland, in 1778. He weighs more than sixty pounds, and is said to have been made of oak. Now he shines with a new coat of gilt paint.

Nearly twenty States of the Union have what are called bird sanctuaries, or laws for the protection of migratory birds on their long flights in search of feeding places.

When sailors speak of fathoms they do not always mean the same thing. On board a man-of-war a fathom means six feet, on board a merchantman five and one-half feet, and on board a fishing vessel five feet.

The fulmar, a sea bird common on the Island of St. Gilda, is so oily that when the natives kill one they simply pass a wick through his body and use it as a lamp. In St. Gilda it is legal to kill the fulmars only during one week in the year, but during that week from 18,000 to 20,000 birds are destroyed.

The largest book in the world—thirteen feet high, eight feet wide and three feet thick—stands in the public square in Ottawa, Can. It was made and bound by the Canadian government printing bureau at Ottawa, and contains the names of all the contributors to the Victory loan.

The largest herring cargo ever brought out of Bering Sea is reported to have arrived at Seattle on the Admiral Watson. She had 3500 barrels of the fish, taken on at Golovin, where, according to the Catalina Islander, "the curing of herring was recently started on an extensive scale and with considerable success."

TOMMY IN AMERICA.

There have been scores of British naval and military officers and hundreds of British bluejackets and Tommies on American soil during this war time, and their fraternizing with fellow-fighters here has been one of the inspiriting sights to the countrymen of both. Not only the professional and technical co-operation, but also the personal cordiality of the officers is a portent for the future, and it cannot be doubted that there have been mutual acquisitions of knowledge.

Equally important has been the association of the rank and file. I heard of a British sergeant who has been teaching bayonet exercises at one of the camps in the South, whose squads of men learned so fast that there was forced from him an appreciation as strongly worded as his condemnation would have been of stupid recruits: "I would be teaching one lot, and the second lot, who were to succeed them, always came and watched and listended; and when I took the second batch they practically knew it all without any telling. If they all learn other things as quickly, and do as well, I ——." Ordinary language then failed him.

A sergeant instructor in the British, American or any other army is not given to adulation of those under his care. That sergeant and the many who are engaged in similar work will take back a vivid idea of the American character to the English communities in which they will move after the war is over.—[Frank Dilmot in Saturday Evening Post.

Dear Cousin William:

Of course I know you [illegible] a traveler that they ain't [illegible] can tell you about out here [illegible] fornia. zkoy's Figurines.

ear ago—or perhaps a little han that—Prince Paul Troubetzkoy took the town by storm e extraordinarily interesting tion of figurines that he held e main gallery at Exposition The showing was an extensive thoroughly comprehensive of ork of this well-known Rus- American sculptor.

rote a review of these fanly graceful small pieces of re at the time, and as the ex- the artist is again holding same place, though somesmaller than the first one, comthe pieces already shown, with or four new ones modeled in ngeles, not much that is fresh w can be said about it in n of Art. But it is good to to refresh ourselves with an- glimpse of the charming s, and to repeat the pleasure a year ago.

ng the new things are a porhead of Mary Pickford, life and a small figure of Sessue kawa standing, robed in a oriental gown. Troubetzlittle figures of Charlie n are, regrettably, not shown. ntly the brilliant motion stars of Los Angeles "got" ulptor as they get all the rest , and he couldn't keep his from the clay when he saw them. And no wonder he wanted to model Mary Pickford, whose face is at once beautiful in its contours and subtle in its play of expression. I regret to say, however, that he was but indifferently successful in his delineation of Miss Pickford's charm. But there is no doubt of the complete success of the Hayakawa figurine. The Japanese screen actor is no less subtle than Mary Pickford, but somehow Troubetzkoy understood and interpreted him better.

A particularly interesting group is the plaster sketch for the Harrison Gray Otis monument. Full justice to this could not be given in the photographs already published, and we now have the advantage of viewing it from all sides and noting its dignity and balance. The completed group, to be finished in one year, will be colossal in size, a fitting memorial to the memory of this famous soldier and newspaper editor.

The Troubetzkoy figures and larger portraits and groups will remain at Exposition Park to the end of this month, and the three other exhibitions now held in the galleries—the pictures of Jack Wilkinson Smith, Robert Martin and William Lees Judson—will also be withdrawn with the passing of 1918.

Jack Smith's Marines.

Jack Wilkinson Smith's advance as a painter of shore marines and landscapes is something to be remarked and carefully considered. Two years ago he very nearly won one of the best prizes offered by the California Art Club. I was one of the jury, and therefore know how close he came to it. This year he was awarded, without a dissenting vote, the recent Liberty Fair's capital prize. The first-named picture hangs in the one-man show the artist is now holding at Exposition Park. Compare it with "November Days," the shore marine that took the honors. Is not Jack Wilkinson Smith's growth as a painter something to wonder at?

It is not only in feeling for color that the great gain is shown, but also, and equally, in technical power and facility. Smith paints better today because he has studied hard and knows more than he did two years ago. He knows more about nature and more about paint. All knowledge is power. Smith's breadth and ease in such pictures as "November Days," "The Cloud Bank," "Evening Tide," "Tide-worn Rocks," comes from this certain knowledge that he has obtained. The man who knows doesn't have to fumble—he doesn't seek for facile "effects" in place of close values and absolute truths.

The most notable of the landscapes in the present collection of admirable pictures is "Passing Showers," a scene of grays and greens, the greens being the fresh hues of California's winter, the grays being seen in the clouded sky and the driving rain. One has the feeling of actual moisture when looking at this finely poetic picture, which is as good in its technique as in its emotional content. Whenever Jack Smith paints pictures as fine as this he certainly takes high rank among our strongest painters of landscapes. "Sylvan Solitude," charming though it is, with its brown and dun rocks and its gold-green foliage, is not so subtle as "Passing Showers," and not so completely realized.

Jack Wilkinson Smith is undoubtedly destined to go very far in his interpretations of landscapes, and especially, perhaps, in his rendering of the sea as studied from the shore. He is still young, and he has a remarkable talent.

Water Colors by Robert Martin.

The gifts of Robert Martin, who exposes in the smaller gallery usually devoted to prints, are apparently devoted to the one medium of water color—and a delightful medium it is in the hands of the man who knows how to make the most of it.

Robert Martin seems to be such a man. For, while the most exquisite and subtle nuances of aquarelle are not attempted by him, his genius for pure and vibrant color is so superb, and he understands the worth of broad simplicity so well, that he attains a strength and a singleness of effect not to be approached in any other medium. It can't be done with oil—strange as this may sound to the uninitiated. A piece of white paper seems a flimsy thing enou but a poet may express infinity on it, whether he uses pen or paint.

There are only sixteen pictures in Robert Martin's exhibition, none of them of any considerable size, yet he offers you something that you won't forget. On broad washes of pure color he often imposes gouache, yet he never lowers the brilliancy of his tone nor the clarity of his color. In brief, he knows how to paint in water color.

The subjects are as simple as the technique. Why search far afield when beauty lies at one's door? "Swans," "Ducks," "Geese," "Regatta," "Courtyard," "Grapes," "Boat Lake," "Marine," "Eucalyptus," "Orange Grove"—here are ten of the wonderful little sixteen.

Landscapes by Judson.

William Lees Judson, one of the oldest as well as one of the best known of our Los Angeles painters, gives us marines, landscapes and figure studies as evidence of his versatility. In the exhibition he is now holding in the same gallery with Jack Wilkinson Smith and Prince Paul Troubetzkoy.

Judson, who is an indefatigable worker, painting hard and teaching with enthusiasm all the year round, holds an exhibition of his canvases every winter, often giving us a whole gallery of new works. Many of the pictures in the present show, however, have been exposed on previous occasions, when they received notice in this column. A few have never been exhibited before.

The most important of the new pictures, and also the largest in size, is "Avalon Bay," a study of that enchanted bit of sea and shore as seen by the artist toward sunset, and giving us all its pink and gray and green-gold glories. The sky is big, over-arching and beautiful showing us little feathery clouds flecked with the gold of the setting sun. Another attractive large canvas is "The Haunt of the Blue Crane," graceful slopes of hills reflected in quiet pools.

"Arroyo Drive" gives us autumnal trees that have dense foliage of pinkish brown, seen against blue-gray mountains and a clouded sky glimpsing blue—it breathes the very spirit of the Arroyo Seco. "Peace Time on the Marne" must have been painted from sketches made years ago, when the artist made a long and happy tour of Europe. Its quaint pink cottages, gray-roofed and with many gables, are set against dark foliage. In the foreground is the placid Marne with its lily-pads and moored scows.

Keith's "California Alps."

William Keith's large picture, "California Alps"—it measures over seven feet by eleven, with the frame—has just been purchased from the Haven collection at Piedmont for the Frank A. Miller collection in the Mission Inn at Riverside. This is indeed an important addition to the admirable collection of Spanish and American pictures now housed in Miller's celebrated hostelry.

"California Alps" is described, by those who have seen it, as imbibing the very spirit of the Sierras. In the immediate foreground is a sunlit valley, with a small lake on the right. Thick woods are shown along a stream and climbing rocky heights. On the left, in the shadow, are some giant trees, typically Keith in color, giving contrasts to the mists and warm glow of the mountains further away.

Over the forest a glimpse is had of the valley nearer the large mountains, and a series of beautiful waterfalls drops into it from a higher plateau. The glory of the picture and the part that shows his prevalent mysticism is the great mass of mountains, snow-covered and dim, in the sunlit mist that occupies the whole upper half of the picture in the distance.

Portraits by Scholl.

Two striking portraits by Edward Scholl, a young New York painter who has recently come to California to make Los Angeles his home, are being exhibited in the Kanst Gallery. One is the portrait of Harry Harvey, well-known director at Universal City, the other is that of Dr. Cecil Edward Reynolds.

The two types of men are diametrically different, but Scholl seizes the characteristics of each with keen acumen and penetration, and moreover fits his technique to his subject with equal discrimination. You feel that these men are exactly as they were painted, and that the artist was not content with mere surface likenesses. He somehow got to their very souls. His technique is extremely modern and sophisticated.

School has just begun the portrait of that beautiful young star of the screen, Mary MacLaren. The result of this later attempt will be looked forward to with interest. But the artist cannot fail—his model is too lovely for that, his talent too sure.

Sheer as Skinny the Rat.

When "Regeneration" is reissued next month, admirers of William Sheer will be given an opportunity of seeing him in a role which he made famous, that of "Skinny the Rat." Sheer has become a Bluebird star at Universal, and has just finished playing the leading role in "Sealed Orders," a picture in which he plays the role of a safe-cracker.

Formerly Sheer was a jockey who ranked among the best in the country. He ended his turf career under a contract to Duke Boris of Russia. At the age of 8 Sheer made his way alone from Ireland to America. He became a bootblack, and at one time worked for the famous "Tony," who gained a fortune in the shoe-polishing business. But the shoe-shining business grew too monotonous for him, so one day out at the race track, during practice time, he begged a chance to ride one of the most vicious race horses in the bunch. Finally, for a joke, the jockey let him, he showed tremendous nerve and control over the animal, and later was given a chance to train.

Kenyon Loses Canary.

If you chance to find a canary out in the desert, or up in the mountains, a canary which looks as if used to polite life and to being manicured regularly, please write Charles Kenyon, scenario writer for Tom Mix, Fox star. Because Kenyon has lost one. It was from the train bound to Los Angeles from San Francisco, in which latter city Kenyon was visiting his mother, that Kenyon, working on a new story, got absent-minded and let the bird escape. He was bringing the little creature home as a present from his mother, and somehow, somewhere, the bird escaped.

Tells a Few Don'ts.

General Manager J. L. Frothingham of B. B. Features, Bessie Barriscale's own company, contributes a few "don'ts" under the head, "For the good of the order," cut of his large experience in picture houses:

Don't hurry about buying your tickets. The man behind you in the line is probably an iron worker and as he doesn't have to get up till 5 o'clock in the morning he should worry about how soon he gets home.

Don't take the seat the usher shows you to. She knows you don't want that seat, but takes you to it just to be mean and ugly.

Don't fail to assist the orchestra. Your neighbors will enjoy your vocal accompaniment. Also if you kept quiet they might not know you were a nut.

Don't forget to read the subtitles loudly enough to be heard several rods away. It is likely that the people near you cannot read and your forethought will be appreciated.

Don't fail to carry on a conversation with your companion. The picture may be "rotten," and your talk will help to cheer up your neighbors.

Don't forget to tell the management just what you think of the picture in case you don't like it, but if you do like it, keep still. The manager may have a weak heart and a sudden burst of joy might kill him.

Don't throw your chewing gum into the gutter before entering the theater. Chew it to keep your neighbor awake, and when your jaws are tired, park it under your chair. It's nice and sanitary to do that.

Don't—but what's the use? Just don't, that's all!

Willat Here Soon.

Irvin Willat, well-known director, will arrive on the Coast shortly to direct Lila Lee in her next Paramount picture, to be produced at the Lasky studio. Miss Lee is spending the holidays in New York with her guardians, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards, and returns to California early in January.

—o—

Whether the wanderlust seized the bird, or whether it just couldn't bear the ieda of living in the house with a genius, isn't known. And then you know the price of birdseed is not so high that there is any reason to suspect Kenyon of having voluntarily let the bird go.

Ethel Clayton at Camps.

Ethel Clayton has been doing the camps this week—Kearny and Fort MacArthur, in making scenes for "Private Pettigrew's Girl," a Paramount picture from Dana Burnett's story. George Malford is directing.

At Camp MacArthur the star and company were given a special mess, and the camp cook presented Miss Clayton, Monte Blue, the leading man, and Capt. Duncan, commanding the company, with three handsome and delicious cakes of their own manufacture, with names and sentiments suitably inscribed in chocolate lettering on the white frosting.

Society Girl a Film.

Virginia Rappe, a society girl of Los Angeles, who accepted an offer from Henry Lehrman a short time ago to appear in Sunshine Comedies, has been working in her first comedy production during the past several weeks. So clever has she proven herself in the art of creating laughter, that Mr. Lehrman will probably place her under a long-term contract to appear in important parts in many of his future productions.

Select Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition of the Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol." Too Tame for Bill Russell.

Just moving along by motor at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour is getting altogether too tame for Bill Russell, star of William Russell Productions Company. Bill came to town from Santa Barbara on Christmas Eve in an airship, a government machine operated by Capt. Edward Wales, who was formerly a member of Russell's company. Wales has been in the service of the government during the past year as an aviator, having been appointed by President Wilson as one of the eight stunt flyers and instructors for the United States government.

Moore's Daughter an Artist.

Tom Moore's first Christmas in California brought him a shower of telegrams and messages from friends acquired since becoming a Goldwyn star. They will not mind when told that the token he enjoyed most of all came from some one else. It was an almost unrecognizable likeness of Santa Claus, done with a red crayon on a card, and it came from no less a person than Alice Mary Moore, his little daughter.

Feist Goldwyn vice-President.

Felix F. Feist has been elected a vice-president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. He is one of the best known younger executives in the industry. Formerly Western manager of Kinemacolor, with offices in Chicago, he resigned from that organization to become general manager of the Celebrated Plays Film Company, later becoming president. He came to New York to become secretary and general manager of the Equitable Pictures Corporation, and here he remained until Equitable was merged with World Film Corporation.

Goes Early, Avoids Rush.

An item of interest gleaned by William Duncan on his recent trip to New York, was the fact that while all the remaining members of his family are content to attend the evening performance at the neighborhood theater of the weekly change of programme on the Duncan-Vitagraph serial, Bill Duncan's father never fails to buy the first ticket sold for the matinee.

Send Farrar a Live Turkey.

Clear from New York comes the word that on Christmas, Geraldine Farrar's possessions were increased by a gift which completely surprised her. This was a 30 pound turkey sent by the owners of the ranch in Wyoming, where the Goldwyn star lived last summer during the producing of "The Hell Cat." The gobbler was alive and sent "Sniffles," Miss Farrar's now rather well-known Pekingese, into squeaks of terror by pecking at her.

Camera Expands.

That lively, hustling little journal, "The Camera," which is edited by E. M. Robbins, that lively, hustling young juornalist, and which tells you what is going on in filland, has had a good year, and dating from January 1, is going to turn over a new leaf—several new leaves, in fact, for it has become a 16-page paper.

WOMEN SUCCESSFUL AS MACHINISTS.

Girls, some of whom a few weeks ago knew nothing about manufacturing machinery, are earning from $35 to $40 weekly in the south shops of the Submarine Boat Corporation, Newark Bay, N. J., according to Speed Up.

On the various machines where they have replaced men, their production is from 10 to 50 per cent. higher and gaining daily. On a piece-work basis, they earn an average of from $6 to $8 a day, and as consistent performers are more regular than men, in the same positions, proved to be.

Miss Jennie Hauch, formerly an employees of the messroom, was one of the pioneer girl workers on the machines. When the call first came for female help in the shop, several weeks ago, she applied to the assistant superintendent for a chance to make good. She was given the opportunity and has done splendidly from the start. All the women employed about the machines wear Hoover-alls, which are more convenient and less dangerous than skirts would be around rapidly-moving cogs and wheels.

A woman physician, Dr. Alice Hamilton Ward, has been installed to guard the health of the women, and it will be her special task to select the strongest from among the applicants and enforce the rules of hygiene in the shops.

Dr. Ward began her campaign with an offensive against high-heeled shoes. The high heels are particularly dangerous because shop floors are littered with rivets and bolts. By stepping on these one of the women workers might fall on a piece of machinery and be seriously hurt. The corporation has served warning that it will not pay compensation for accidents caused by the wearing of high heels.

CARNEGIE HAPPY AT 83.

Andrew Carnegie celebrated his eighty-third birthday anniversary at his home, motoring for two hours in the morning and entertaining a few friends and relatives at luncheon. Most of the day he spent in the house. Although it was said he is in good health, his physicians have urged him to conserve his strength in order that he may realize his ambition to live 100 years.

Mr. Carnegie received many telegrams and messages of congratulation from old friends and associates. Among those who sent messages were Thomas A. Edison and Charles M. Schwab. Mr. Edison telegraphed that he expected to call on the day Mr. Carnegie was 85 years old.

The re-establishment of peace made Mr. Carnegie especially happy on his birthday. Before the war started he gave many millions to the furtherance of world peace. He gave $1,500,000 for the erection of the Peace Palace at The Hague, and in 1910 established a fund of $10,000,000 to maintain the peace of the world.—[New York Times.

"BRING THE KAISER TO BOOT," SAYS BISHOP.

"I am thoroughly in favor of bringing William to boot and the German people along with him," Bishop Matt S. Hughes said last night at the Hotel Baltimore where he dined betwen trains on the way from his home in Seattle to a Methodist Episcopal conference in Arkansas.

"It wasn't all the Kaiser's fault," Bishop Hughes continued. "The common people knew what autocracy was like before the war ever came along. Why, in the good old days when we were touring Germany we didn't find the 'Watch on the Rhine" all a matter of song and poetry. Then there were thousands of German soldiers guarding the Rhine. And when we'd go to the beautiful Rhine gardens at night and yodelers from Tyrol would be in the midst of their singing, some little shavetail snipe of an under officer was forever putting in his appearance. When he'd come, everything would stop while the people clicked their heels in salute and shivered until he left. But those people were willing to stand by their Kaiser while he was winning, and now they needn't whine about being abandoned." — [Kansas City Times.

LIGHT A CURATIVE AGENCY.

It is rapidly becoming the practice both in private and professional circles to apply the rays of a powerful electric lamp to various affected parts of the body. They will conquer and banish pain and other symptoms of most diseases, it is said, thereby giving Nature a better opportunity to overcome the underlying condition and lessening the amount of medicine required, it is said.

For instance, they will overcome the pain of wrenched or sprained muscles or pressure upon nerves, and help poor circulation, numbness and stiffness of any part following cold or injury. Nothing penetrates, heals or soothes sore areas and so promptly re-establishes the vim and vigor of the patient as the timely application of heat and light therapy.

When applied early after a bruise, as of the eye or face, they prevent swelling and discoloration of the skin. The light is said to decrease the pain of a carbuncle, boil or abscess. In the early stages it may prevent the formation of pus; in the later stages it helps to ripen the abscess.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Now that the Christmas festivities are over and New Year's approaches apace, club women again will turn their attention to the sterner and more practical side of life—to the guiding of the feminine mind in the way it should go.

The Friday Morning Club will resume activities January 3, with a lecture by Madeline Veverka, who is the official speaker for the Czecho-Slovak Society. Mme. Veverka will speak on the "Czecho-Slovak Republic; the Heart of Europe."

Women's University Club.

The Women's University Club will have its January jinks Saturday, January 4. According to a time-honored custom among the college women, this meeting will begin with a luncheon at 12:30 p.m. The board will serve the luncheon, assisted by the House Committee, under the direction of Miss Ada Heineman and Miss Mae Owen. The programme for no University Club meeting is fully announced in advance, but it is known that Alice Brown's play, "Joint Owners in Spain," is to be presented under the direction of Miss Edith Spencer. The cast is Miss Spencer, Miss Lucy du Bois, Miss Lucille Curtis and Mrs. Herman Fleischman. At the second meeting of the month, Friday afternoon, January 17, the club is to hear Capt. Souris of the French army.

Los Angeles Drama League.

Next Thursday evening the Los Angeles Drama League will inaugurate a series of public discussions of American plays on American problems, under various leaders. These will take place at 8:15 p.m. the first Thursday evening of each month in the auditorium, on the tenth floor of the public library. The play selected for the opening meeting is Edward Sheldon's drama of business and politics, "The Boss." The series is under the general direction of Dr. Allison Gaw, head of the department of English at the University of Southern California, who will conduct the opening meeting.

Catholic Women's Club.

The Catholic Women's Club will have a meeting Friday, January 3. Prof. B. R. Baumgardt will lecture on Italy. Owing to the health conditions, the children's party has been abandoned. The funds necessary for the children's entertainment have been dispensed to the poor.

Women's City Club.

The Women's City Club Christmas jinks are planned for December 30. There will be a cabaret tea from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m., and every member is urged to bring friends. Tea will be served for 35 cents, and a programme in which many professionals will appear will open with community singing, directed by Prof. Hugo Kirchhoffer. Tea will be served in Hamburger's cafe, instead of in the auditorium room. The next meeting of the club will be Monday, January 6.

Wednesday Morning Club.

The Wednesday Morning Club had as afternoon speaker Stephen K. Szymanowski, whose subject was "The Past and Future of Poland." Helen Fernandez, a 14-year-old pianist, played two piano numbers. Preceding the programme, Miss C. H. de Caen, aviatrix, spoke on the American soldier in France. The President, Mrs. Charles A. Holland, delivered to headquarters 125 garments for French and Belgian relief. A number of gifts were collected for the old people at the County Farm as the club's Christmas contribution. The club will resume meetings on January 8.

Hollywood Women's Club.

On New Year's night the Hollywood Women's Club will hold an informal reception, with cards and dancing, at the clubhouse. The affair is to be given by the board of directors, and invitations are extended to all members, every one of whom is allowed to bring two guests.

California Badger Club.

The California Badger Club will hold a meeting, January 9 at 2 p.m. in the Ebell clubhouse. Mrs. Martha Nelson McCan will speak on some phases of the rehabilitation of France, with lantern slides as accessories. Mrs. Jessamine Anderson will sing, with Miss Helen Warner at the piano.

Women's Press Club.

The dinner, so long postponed, which was to have been given by the Press Club, with Mrs. James H. Balagh as hostess, is to be abandoned, and the club has planned another affair in February, which will be called a "Washington-Lincoln" dinner.

W.C.T.U.

The Los Angeles W.C.T.U. will hold a reception on New Year's Day, from 2 to 4 p.m., at the Southern California Home for Women. There is to be a musical programme.

Conference of Press Chairmen.

A conference of Los Angeles District C.F.W.C. press chairmen will be held Saturday, January 4, at No. 618 Chamber of Commerce Building at 10:30 a.m. Various newspaper club editors will be present, and will give practical talks to club publicity women.

WHAT NEXT? ASKS GRIFFITH.

whatever in it. And a few weeks ago, just before the armistice was signed, he began work on a Chinese story, which promises a wonderful study of oriental character.

Speaking of character study, more and more of Griffith's pictures are becoming that. Even though "The Greatest Thing in Life" is superficially a war picture, yet, what you will remember longest is not the exciting battle stuff, but maybe a glimpse of the wistful clodhopper lover from Brittany, so admirably played by Dave Butler, who tried hard, but at the end could see naught in Rostand's rooster but a "chicken," and so voiced his realization of the whole gulf that lay between him and the dainty Lillian. Witness, too, Bobby Harron's subtle delineation of the development of the Harvard exquisite—at Harvard, they tell you, the students consider themselves too good to speak to each other—into the fighter who pillows the dying negro's head on his breast. And no character is too trivial to be treated with the human touch; who will forget the vivid picture Elmo Lincoln gives of the joyous doughboy? We must know more of that doughboy, we feel!

"Of course, that's what picture-making is coming to," said Mr. Griffith. "Character study."

When Griffith returns to Europe, and he's certain to go sooner or later, he will find a host of famous friends awaiting him. And, while no doubt the friendship of the great English and French statesmen is very precious to him, still, one somehow gets the impression that closer yet to his heart are the memories of his companionships with the literary folk who became his friends during his sojourn abroad.

A delightful raconteur is Mr. Griffith, and he repeats in inimitable fashion the story which J. M. Barrie, with characteristic good humor and whim, tells on himself in regard to the plunge which he and Bernard Shaw made into the motion-picture producing business.

" 'We thought,' said Barrie, 'that picture-making would be easy. It looks so simple! So Mr. Shaw and I wrote the story, and we were sure it was a noble story. We knew it was well produced, for we used all the famous actors in London in it, Sir Charles Wyndham, Charles Hawtrey, Forbes Robertson, and all the rest, and in order to give the people an extra treat Mr. Shaw and I appeared in a special scene of it ourselves.

" 'We wanted to uplift the people—and we did! We uplifted the audiences right out of their seats.

" 'We tried to think where we should put that important scene in which we both appeared. We put it in at the beginning of the picture, but it somehow didn't fit. We couldn't put it in the middle, because that interrupted the continuity. Finally, we decided to put it in at the end.

" 'Naturally I wanted to see how I'd look in a picture. So one day I dropped into the theater where the photoplay was running. But it didn't look a bit, that photoplay didn't, as I had thought it was going to. The story just seemed to run on and on—that seemed to be the only place it was going, was on and on—and pretty soon that audience began going on and on! I thought I'd stick it out in order to see myself on the screen, but I never had that privilege—people around me began to look at me so reproachfully, as the story ran on and on and never got anywhere. I just had to get up and go on myself!' "

A very clever, a very adroit man is that D. W. Griffith! While we thought he was merely making war pictures and romances, here he has been busy with "something else again," as Mr. Potash says. Now it is announced for the first time that the Babylonian episodes of "Intolerance" have been expanded into a seven-reel feature.

Terrific drama and a smash you could fairly hear were in that wondrous "Fall of Babylon," and despite its remoteness from our period, it somehow managed to be the most human of all the stories that made up "Intolerance." As an eastern critic wittily said, "The ancients in 'Intolerance' forgot to behave like ancients." Everybody went to see it, from college professors, who went, they said, because it was such a marvel of historical and archeological accuracy, to Ziegfeld Follies experts; I know one man who went twice to see "Intolerance," and on the second showing went to sleep throughout the other periods, demanding he be awakened whenever Babylon came round again!

It is the love story which has been expanded. I think all of us who saw the lovely Seena Owen as the ill-fated Princess, true to the last to her kingly husband, have wanted to know more about them, and as for the fiery little Constance Talmadge as the Mountain Girl, with Elmer Clifton as her bucolic lover, we never did get over the fact that they died!

Here's a pleasant surprise for you! In the new story, the little Mountain Girl and her lover live!

"You see, that's how the original story was made. Then we changed it. But we kept that film. I've allowed the lovers to live this time," he smiled, "and they go away into the desert together. No, I really don't know what becomes of them after that, but it must be a very fascinating thing to do, mustn't it?—going away into the desert with one's lover!"

"Intolerance" is still running in Europe, where it was received with tremendous acclaim, and has been the big success of screen history, its keen satire, its pitiless logic, its philosophy, meeting with greater response than was the case in this country. It had tremendous vogue in England, and in Italy an American manager who thought he was very shrewd sold the film to a national exhibitor, who got his money back in two cities alone. It is about to be shown in France at present.

The Babylonian story is remarkable not only for its tremendously-spectacular features, but for its authenticity and accuracy from the standpoints of history and archeology, on which phases, in fact, no less a person than Rev. A. H. Sayce, head of the British Museum, wrote a long discourse, while Prof. Jastro, head of Assyriology in the University of Pennsylvania, also wrote concerning these matters, and sent Mr. Griffith a relic from one of the excavations of Babylon—a brick showing the record of a sale of barley to Belshazzar.

"And selling barley to Belshazzar does make him seem so human, doesn't it?" I interposed frivolously, "like Cleopatra scolding the laundress, or Helen of Troy shopping for fresh eggs!"

"But be careful how you put that in—about the brick!" warned Mr. Griffith, "because, of course, you know there were other sorts of bricks handed and even thrown at me—especially by the bearded old ladies on the censor board of a certain straight-laced eastern town!"

REINDEER FAIRS OFF, DUE TO ALASKA FLU.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SEATTLE, Dec. 17.—Reindeer fairs, always the big winter events of Eskimo calendars in Northwestern Alaska, are not to be held this year on account of the influenza epidemic, according to word reaching the United States officials in charge of Alaskan education here.

Already the epidemic has spread rapidly among the natives in the Seward Peninsula. By keeping the Eskimos apart and by not holding the fairs, officials believe the disease can be checked.

Usually several fairs are held at various Eskimo villages each year. The natives, with their reindeer, come for miles around and engage in athletic contests, listen to instruction on reindeer culture and place their deer on exhibition and in contests for prizes.

THREE ENLISTMENTS FOR WAR IS RECORD.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 17.—Roy M. Taylor of this city has a list of three honorable discharges from the United States Army, all received since the United States declared a state of war with Germany, which he believes is a record. Taylor volunteered for service with the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Artillery July 2, 1917. He contracted rheumatism at a California training camp and was discharged in February of this year.

Becoming 21 years of age August 24, he again was inducted into the service after registration, but the call in which he was, was canceled because of the influenza epidemic and he received a second discharge. He was again inducted into the service November 9, but the signing of the armistice intervened, and he received his third discharge November 12.

would have the government Federal district gather all on real estate and those in general, reserving for municipalities the collection of such distinctly municipal revenues as those from markets and slaughter-houses, vehicles, water rents, fees, posts, cemeteries, fines, income from public property and the like. The tax on the consumption of pulque and those on inheritances and donations he would have transferred to the Federal government.

Today the Federal district and the municipalities share in the collection of many of these taxes, as well as in their product, with a consequent loss of revenue estimated at several hundred thousand pesos in a year.

Dr. Young recommends that the number of municipalities in the Federal district be cut down from thirteen to six or seven, that the number of concejales or Aldermen, for each of these be considerably reduced, and that the present financial organization of the government of the district be changed fundamentally, to consist of the Governor, as at present, appointed by the President; a treasurer, controller and tax commission.

He believes the reforms he urges, if put into effect, will not only render the Federal district self-supporting, but reduce the burden to the taxpayer and substantially simplify Mexico's fiscal problems. His conclusions are convincing. Their serious consideration by the Carranza government is an omen full of promise for the future of Mexico under the constitutionalists.

COMING EVENTS ON THE STAGE.

patient and great-hearted daughter. The cast also includes Pauline Curley, Winter Hall, George Nicholls and little Ben Alexander.

California.

Lines that reached a block in each direction from the box office of Miller's new California Theater all day yesterday was evidence enough that Los Angeles knew where this beautiful new shrine of the silent drama was located. The big feature picture, "Arizona," with Douglas Fairbanks, took the audience by storm, for "Doug" was right in his element in the role of the nervy lieutenant of Augustus Thomas's famous story of the great Southwest. So great has the interest proven to be in the new house and Fairbank's big picture that it will be shown until a week from tomorrow.

Tally's Broadway.

Alice Brady, in her latest success, "Her Better Half," Charlie Chaplin's third tremendous week of "Shoulder Arms," a brand new news weekly, and an exceptionally fine musical programme will complete what is possibly the longest bill ever shown at Tally's. Mr. Tally feels that he would not be doing justice to the lovers of Chaplin comedy, who were busy Christmas shopping during the first two weeks' run, if he did not keep "Shoulder Arms" another week.

Mason.

Girls—a word of comfort! Don't envy the gracefulness of Julian Eltinge in his feminine impersonations. Eltinge himself warns you not to.

"If a real girl affected the mannerisms I use on the stage she would look ridiculous," says Eltinge, who is appearing with his own company in a new production at the Mason Operahouse this coming week.

"Affectation and exaggeration are needed in my impersonations, because I must be as feminine as possible. A woman or a girl should not mimic my mannerisms, no matter how charming they seem, because they are not natural, and therefore are not gracefulness itself."

Hippodrome.

Did you ever see a man make $5000 an hour? If not, you will be able to see Hale Hamilton do this remarkable trick in his Metro feature, "Five Thousand Dollars an Hour," at the Hippodrome, starting today, for three days.

The headline vaudevile act will be Jack Levy and his four symphony sisters in a "Study in Melody;" The Andre Sisters will present some clever character delineations; Ross and Porter come with glowing press notices about their original comedy playlet, "Whipped," full of clever satire. King and King are konwn as one of the most versatile duos in vaudeville, and in their offering, "Songs and Smiles," they can be relied upon to command attention. Lind, female impersonator, presents his singing and dancing, with gorgeous scenery and costuming. Tudor and Stanton, in "A Night in the Everglades," and the Pathe News complete the show.

Victory.

The current week at this theater is confidently expected by the management to be their banner week, as they are offering Bessie Barriscale in the greatest success of her career, "The Heart of Rachel," from the best-selling novel of the same name, by Kathleen Norris. The cast includes Ella Hall, Hershel Mayall, Gloria Hope, Herbert Heyes, J. J. Dowling, Edward Coxen, little Ben Alexander, Mary Jane Irving, Grace Travers and others. The production introduces an innovation in screencraft which will doubtless prove as valuable as the "close-up" and the "cut-back." There is the usual diversified programme, including an O. Henry story, a travelette, a comedy, a topical and several other numbers.

Clune's Auditorium.

Owing to the fact that many of his stars are appearing in the prologue, and that he is about to finish another great picture, D. W. Griffith has announced that he will exhibit "The Greatest Thing in Life" only one week more, starting tomorrow matinee. The presentation of this clasic has been a great success, but as Mr. Griffith is a producer and not an exhibitor exclusively, he will be unable to allow his latest success to continue at Clune's Auditorium as long as he did "Hearts of the World" and "The Clansman."

There will be two performances on New Year's Eve and New Year's night.

Ray's Garden.

Ray's Garden is evidently going to start the New Year right, for a big double bill consisting of Gladys Brockwell in her latest Fox production, "Kultur," and a Pathe Lehrman comedy, "Mongrels," will be the offering of the popular South Main-street playhouse during the coming week, starting today. "Kultur" is said to be a drama of more than ordinary interest, dealing with the teachings of the German high command, and showing the effect such a practice would have on the world if these policies were followed out. Miss Brockwell is seen as the favorite of an emperor.

"Mongrels' is a rapid-fire, sure-shot comedy staged in a munitions factory.

Pantages.

For New Year's week, beginning with Monday's matinee, Pantages will have a show that will outdo even the efforts of last week, according to Manager Carl Walker, who states that Alexander Pantages has created a bill with several big features in order to make the Los Angeles public remember it as the biggest New Year's week show they ever witnessed. Also, Manager Walker states that for New Year's Eve there will be suitable observances of the dying of the old year and the advent of the new, and a certain amount of noise is expected from the audience.

Clune's Broadway.

Possessing a charming personality and unusually gifted as an actress, Dorothy Gish is proving her ability as a screen star, and that she will hold a conspicuous place among film luminaries is a foregone conclusion. Dainty Miss Gish, whose first starring vehicle, "Battling Jane," was shown at Clune's Broadway a few weeks ago, will appear again at this popular theater in her new photoplay, "The Hope Chest," for the week beginning today. The author of "The Hope Chest" is Mark Lee Luther, a popular writer of the day.

Kinema.

The Kinema, in extending New Year's greetings to all its patrons, announces that 1919 will be given a rousing start with an all-comedy bill of screen and musical attractions. The feature which will hold the silver sheet for the coming week is one pleasantly anticipated for some time, it being Tom Moore's first starring vehicle, "Thirty a Week," which is said to give the popular actor many opportunities. Added attractions on the new bill are a Sunshine comedy, "The Fatal Marriage," and the Kinema Quartette.

Alhambra.

The reappearance of Dustin Farnum at the Alhambra is enough to attract attention. But to see him announced in Zane Grey's powerful western story, "The Light of Western Stars," is to interest every lover of big dramatic romance. Starting today, Dustin Farnum opens the pages of this popular book on the Alhambra screen, and to live through the adventure, romance and exciting events with him is to be really entertained. In striking contrast to Dustin Farnum's vivid portrayal of the true western type of manhood is Winifred Kingston's dainty characterization of the eastern heroine. On the same bill will be the latest news happenings in France.

Morosco.

"Sick Abed" begins its second and last week at the Morosco with todays' matinee. The complications of the story are of the sort that furnish a good laugh a minute. It is a farce that improves with speed, and the Moroscoites have speeded up at every performance, until the play is now running with the smoothness that marked its big success in New York. There is a most agreeable ending to the story, but before that arrives the audience have accompanied the actors through one of the merriest series of situations of the present theatrical year. Charles Meredith, as the sick man, and Florence Malone, as the day nurse, head the cast.

De Luxe.

Mary Pickford, in "Johanna Enlists," is the big drawing card at the De Luxe today and tomorrow. The story of this sterling comedy was written by Rupert Hughes and adapted to the screen by Frances Marion. Mary Pickford never did put her loveliness, her charm or her winning ways across to better advantage than in this film, which pictures a little girl who never had a "beau" until a regiment of soldiers camped near her father's farm. Tuesday and New Year's Day, Wallace Reed, in "The Source," will be the feature and on Thursday and Friday, the attraction will be Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane."

WHEN THE GUNS QUIT BARKING.

American Army All Dressed Up and no One to Fight.

Doughboys Startled by the Sound of Reveille.

Everybody More or Less Disconcerted by Armistice.

[From Stars and Stripes.]

All last week the battle line along the Meuse, from Sedan down toward Verdun, presented the strange and somewhat comic spectacle of the American Army all dressed up and no one to fight.

From that never-to-be-forgotten eleventh hour of November 11 to dawn on the following Sunday, when the march to the Rhine began, the front was a rest area.

The river line, where only a week before it had been treason and madness to strike a match, now glowed with the embers of a thousand Yankee camp fires. The bugle music of retreat sounded out at sundown across what had been No Man's Land. There, field kitchens, warped and weary from the strain of chasing the doughboys for forty breathless kilometers, had a chance at last to trundle past them, settle down in front of them, and, thus strangely placed, bring forth an endless succession of well-earned flapjacks.

There, too, the free-and-easy, rip-and-let-her-go-boys existence of the front gave way to all the fuss and feathers of cantonment life. Formal guard mount there would be as the afternoon shadows lengthened along the Meuse, and drills there were a-plenty, drills in fields to which the shell holes gave the look of new-plowed ground. Where but a week before the cannon had cursed and the machine guns rattled, there could be heard now nothing but the harsh calls of "Squads left, damn you," and "Squads right about."

ROUSED BY REVEILLE.

The doughboy, roused on these frosty November mornings by the half-forgotten sound of reveille, and discovering that life in the front line had become suddenly complicated by the unfamiliar presence there of the top sergeant, crawled out of his canvas "chatoo," shivered, cursed, and, in the bottom of his heart, wondered if this old armistice was all it had been cracked up to be.

The front was a rest area, meaning that the troops, after the first wild, unchecked jubilation of the 11th, had settled down to work. It was drill, drill, drill for the infantry and the artillery. It was work from dawn to dusk for the Signal Corps wiremen getting ready to link the Meuse and the Rhine—work, too, for the pioneers and engineers on the splintered river bridges and on all the roads approaching them. Now and again one of their quarry explosions would jar all the battlefields and start each time the agitating suggestion that the war had reopened for business.

The week was made stirring, heart-warming, memorable by the steady flow through our impatient lines of prisoners returning from Germany. Out of Longwy, out of Longuyon, and all the towns and villages of the frontier came a happy multitude of young and old, men and women, soldiers and civilians.

WHOLE COLUMNS OF BOYS.

There were whole columns of boys, kidnaped early in the war, from up Lille way. They had been toiling dismally in the towns from which the Germans were now departing for good and all. When the order had come for the lines to withdraw beyond the Rhine, their captors turned them loose.

Then, one and all, they set their faces toward Paris. Was it still there—Paris? Had it been bombed to pieces? The Germans said so. Had Clemenceau been killed? The Germans said so.

So the questions poured from them when once more they found themselves with friendly faces all about. They had not enough clothing on their backs nor enough food in their bellies, but, one and all, they were grinning from ear to ear, and one and all, they got fed somehow at the inexhaustible American kitchens as they trudged through our lines along the wonder-road that led to home.

BACK TO THEIR OWN DIVISION.

Then there were prisoners of war as well, French, Italian, Russian—and American, some abruptly and dramatically released from their work on the roads behind the German lines, some formally delivered from the big prison camp in Luxemburg. Of these, the most eager and the most fleet were five Yanks, taken prisoner at Juvigny in September, who outstripped the rest and arrived one night, fagged out, hungry and footsore, at the American line. By a freak of circumstance, they found themselves in the area of their own division.

"Who's there?" the sentry called.

"Go to hell," a voice answered affectionately from out the darkness. "I'm Hindy himself, if you all want to know."

The sentry forgot that he was a sentry and disobeyed four or five general orders in rapid succession, so great was his haste to welcome the wanderers. He threw down his gun, which hard-boiled sentries never do, and shook hands all round.

That was after the Boches had started to fade silently away from their positions on the other side of No Man's Land, but even before their going, some recently-captured prisoners began to trickle back to their own people. And if the War Diary is really complete, it will have an entry noting gravely how, on the night of the 11th, some twenty-eight American prisoners were brought down to the barbed wire by their captors and there formally handed over in exchange for two cartons of cigarettes.

THOUSANDS OF LAST SHOTS

Meanwhile, no chronicler can ever hope to set down all the yarns that were told and all the rumors that were spread around the camp fires at night. From a hasty compilation of the statistics there furnished, an investigation could easily establish the fact that the last shot of the war was fired 78,926 times. At least that many shells have already been sold to Y.M.C.A. men and other Americans in France as certified souvenirs of the last moment of the war.

And the rumors. Just as the camps back in the States used to buzz every morning with the news that the outfit was going to France, so last week every organization in the Zone of Advance was on edge with the expectation of leaving before dark for Berlin. And, though home would not look so very terrible to most of us just now, it should be set down here that every [illegible] invited to the Rhine [illegible] outraged at the omission.

Then, just as last summer the A. E.F. was agog over the question as to which outfits would parade in Paris on the Fourth of July, so now there has been an omnipresent [illegible] inside stuff according to which three divisions will march up Fifth avenue on Christmas Day. Each division is a little puzzled as to the identity of the other two.

JAZZ FOR FAMOUS SCOT.

It was after dark that the [illegible] and the rumors throve. And the festivities, too. It was during the motionless week that the greatest and gentlest Scot of our time made a pilgrimage to Verdun. He found its battered streets packed with parading Poilus, Tommies and Yanks, with here and there some soldiers from Russia and Italy and Algeria and far-off Annam.

He went to the old cathedral at night, drawn across the courtyard to the basement of the saintly College Marguerite, by the zippy [illegible] from one of the jazziest bands in France.

There he found officers and [illegible] treading the stately measures of the fox trot. He wandered through the dim candle-lit corridors of the citadel itself, in front of which, in a space of three square kilometers, the armies of Germany and France fought night and day through eight of the most bitter and [illegible] critical months in the history of man. Now, around each candle, a group of soldiers bent over something on the stone flagging, and from each group ever and anon, a strange incantation which seemed, at times, to form such phrases as:

"What's that? What's [illegible] Baby needs a pair o' shoes. What's that? Read 'em and weep. I [illegible] you. Read 'em and weep!"

EDUCATIONAL.

Leading educators gathered at the Princeton conference, agreed that the demobilization of the S.A.T.C. will work serious financial hardship on the colleges of the country. They urge some form of government subsidy.

A suggestion is made in the Alumni Bulletin that there be placed a memorial tablet in the Harvard room last occupied by every alumnus and former student who gave his life in the war.

Raymond Dodge of the faculty of Wesleyan University, has been made lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, in recognition of special service during the war. He is reported to have perfected several sets of apparatus by means of which it is possible to ascertain quickly and accurately which men of a group will make the best gun-pointers, a process which heretofore has required considerable time.

Cornell was fifty years old in October and under ordinary conditions would have made much of the anniversary. But just as the war made a postponement of the celebration necessary, so the end of the war permits that celebration. The result is that in June Cornell will hold appropriate birthday exercises. By that time, President Schurman [illegible] in his annual report, thousands of the alumni and students now overseas will probably be able to come back to alma mater for a few days.

Boston University, like many another institution of learning, will be for the time at least a year-round college. The work of all departments will be continued through the summer months in order that students who wish to enter [illegible] may complete a full year's work by the opening of the new term in September.

President R. D. Hetzel of New Hampshire College announced recently that he had declined an appointment as regional director of the agricultural educational army overseas service, tendered him by the Army Overseas Educational Commission. The appointment would have taken President [illegible] away for a year, beginning about January 1.

Smith has been made the recipient of a scholarship founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Creevey Hamm, [illegible] '05, in memory of her husband, Capt. Arthur Ellis Hamm, who was killed in the drive on the St. [illegible] salient in September. The proceeds of Capt. Hamm's government insurance of $10,000 will be divided between Smith College and [illegible] State University, where Capt. Hamm was a student. At Smith College the interest from the $5000 will be awarded to the applicant from the freshman class who passes the best mid-year examinations. The scholarship will be given [illegible] beginning this year. In addition Mrs. Hamm has presented the college with a portrait of her husband which will be placed in the college library to remain as an example of the type of American our country has sent to France.

A report of activities of Wellesley College clubs has been issued by Miss Helen P. Margesson, chairman of the committee on Wellesley Clubs of the Graduate Council. In addition to the support of the Wellesley Unit, the clubs have among them maintained a Wellesley bed in Neuilly, given to the Sophia [illegible] Ambulance, adopted several French orphans, and assisted the Wellesley North China Mission, the A.C.A. Fellowship, and the International Institute for Girls in Spain. The Berkshire Club helps to maintain at Wellesley a student from that territory, as do several other clubs. The Philadelphia Club has started a scholarship at the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania.

BY TERESA PENN MATHEWS.

[SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR TO THE TIMES.]

arly in 1914 Miss Teresa Penn Mathews received a high appointment at the of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, father-in-law of the ex-Kaiser's second son, Eitel Frederick. At the outbreak of the war she was seized by the police, and imprisoned. Eventually she escaped to Holland. In the series of articles begun below she writes with vividness of remarkable experiences at the Grand palace, where she met Prince Eitel Frederick, Von Emmich, the violator of and various other German notables.]

seeing the photograph of this surprised me very much to her so very plain and homely. had a large, bony forehead, with growing very far back, small and a shapeless, sulky mouth. figure looked very stout and ly, and she was dressed with disregard for line or fashion which has always distinguished royal ladies. Certainly the woman in the world one would of illicit love affairs.

on I heard many strange of the banished Grand Duch of her many scandalous esca with men of high and low and of the dramatic manner which the plans for elopement one of her lovers were frustrat by the secret police.

ady on that drive to the pal I found that my eyes were by the few remarks of my panion. The household of I was about to become a mem was evidently not quite as it had represented. I must be on my and keep my wits about me, I ed.

CHARMING MANNER.

ries stood at the gate of the . A little group was also sta there to perform what speare calls "flourish" on the ce or exit of one of the royal . As we were not important did not go through their antics, themselves with looking terribly solemn in token of their respect.

The Grand Duke impressed me at once by his charming manner. He did not look his age, which was 64, and his whole bearing was more English than German. Rather too short for complete dignity, he nevertheless carried himself well, and bore the unmistakable stamp of breeding so surprisingly lacking in many German royalties.

Our conversation was just the conventional one about the journey, and he conveyed a most courteous welcome without uttering a word to that effect; then telling me we should meet at supper he left me.

Fraulein von Jachowitz fluttered down upon me at once to ask what had passed. Her life was evidently circumferenced by the Grand Duke, and his words and actions were a source of interest to her.

"NICEST IN GERMANY."

He had been so ordinary and natural that I found it difficult to stir up any corresponding flutter. So I said it was very nice of him to come and make my acquaintance in that unceremonious manner. I was rather bored already by so much flattering reference to this man.

Fraulein von Jachowitz began to sing his praises at once. "He is by far the nicest royal Duke in Germany," she said. "Wait until you go to the Berlin court! The Kaiser amuses himself by making things awkward at the court, and deliberately puts people into most embarrassing positions. Many things might be irksome for us here, the Grand-Duchess being away, but the Grand Duke invariably smooths things over, and adjusts any dispute with a little tactful remark."

At that moment the two princesses appeared to greet me. The elder one, Princess Ingeborg, was very pretty. The younger one, Princess Altburg, was very fair, and of much less interesting appearance than her sister.

A WEEDY PRINCE.

We then assembled on the balcony surrounding a large square hall, and I saw that the living-rooms and apartments were all built from the passage outside this balcony, which was separated by a wall and occasional folding doors. Beneath from the balcony, the hall looked immense, and there were evidently various drawing-rooms, etc., opening from it. The Grand Duke afterwards told me that he had built the house round the enormous square carpet, which had been a present from some oriental grandee when he was traveling in the East. It transpired that the late Grand Duchess had been an invalid during most of their married life, and it was on her account that they had left the royal palace of Oldenburg, which has no modern comforts and no garden, and taken up their residence at the Elizabeth Anne Palace.

The young Prince Nicholas soon appeared with his companion, Otto von Finck, and his tutor, Herr von Mack. The Prince was a weedy, sickly looking youth of 17, quite amiable, and very young for his age, but he did not show signs of any great intelligence. His voice had not yet broken and this struck me very much, because his friend had a curiously low, bass voice and a very dignified manner, which also contrasted with the childish giggling of the Prince.

The tutor, or aide-de-camp, as he would become later, was Rittmeister von Mack, a large, clean-shaven, bald-headed man of about 40. He was evidently used to being the life and soul of the party, and laughed heartily at every remark he made himself. The Prince was most enthusiastic also, and wriggled with delight almost every time Von Mack spoke.

HAD A "GOOD FACE."

They were very polite to me, but left me to be entertained by Fraulein von Jachowitz and the first lady-in-waiting, Fraulein von Bulow, a connection of that much-talked-of Prince von Bulow, who now appeared for the first time. She was gigantically tall and rather plain, with what kind people term "a good face." Certainly her smile was very charming, and she seemed to be exactly suited to her position. I felt at home with her at once, and somehow Fraulein von Jachowitz fell naturally into a secondary place, and being by nature an apologetic, self-effacing soul, she did not seem to notice this.

The Grand Duke came punctually at 8 o'clock, shook hands with us, and made some laughing remark to his son—whom, I noticed, afterwards, he never treated seriously. Then we walked across the great dining-room to a smaller one leading out of it. The Grand Duke was dressed in a most elaborate uniform, which I found afterwards was that of the Thirteenth Hanoverian Regiment.

The Grand Duke courteously stepped aside to let us pass, but on reaching our chairs we waited for him to be seated before we took our places. There was no unnecessary fuss, but it was very correct. Two dogs, the Grand Duke's constant companions, followed us, and took their places each side of his chair. One, Greif, was a very fine police dog, indifferent to everybody but his master, and the other, a waddling, long-haired darling named Schufftel, of no particular breed, to my eyes, but favoring the Aberdeen terrier.

Prince Nike also had his dog—an absurd dachshund, with no character and ready to make friends with anyone. Lump was his name. This dog evidently preferred low society, for he constantly escaped from the palace, and only returned on compulsion.

SUSPICIOUS RIVALRY.

Fraulein von Bulow, who sat opposite me at the Duke's right hand, was apparently used to bearing the chief responsibility. Fraulein von Jachowitz kept a watchful eye on her, and, although they were outwardly friendly, I could not help perceiving as they answered the Grand Duke's questions about the doings of the day a certain suspicious rivalry between them. The Princess and his tutor also exchanged glances now and again.

Fraulein von Jachowitz gave a rapid look around sometimes, as if she were aware of some hostility, and I felt instinctively that the others were in a way arrayed against her. She ate scarcely anything, and looked very frail in comparison with Fraulein von Bulow.

The Grand Duke addressed himself to me chiefly in quite good English. Both ladies spoke English perfectly, but the Prince and his tutor knew only a few words.

The People and Their Troubles

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

Husbands and Wives.

BY DOROTHY DIX.

One of the curious reactions of matrimony seems to be that, in the great majority of cases, it dulls the brightness and withers the charm of those who enter into it. Some fine and illusive quality of mind and spirit, some airy, fairy grace of soul appears to be crushed out by domesticity so that you rarely find a man and a woman who are as attractive after marriage as they were before.

This is true even of those who are happily married and who have no black disappointment to warp their outlook on life, or kill their aspirations. Except in the solid, plodding, work-a-day virtues, after marriage the great majority of people stand still, or if they progress, they progress backwards, as an Irishman might say.

Before marriage John was an omniverous reader and nothing was more interesting than to get him talking about new books and authors. Meet him five years after marriage, and he will tell you that he doesn't keep up with current literature, that he only has time for the newspapers and the stock market. Or perhaps John was a marvelous raconteur who could tell a story, or do a bit of pantomime as well as any headline vaudevillian, but a few years of matrimony extinguishes John's sense of humor and puts his little talent entirely out of commission.

Before marriage Mary played and sang almost like a professional. Thousands of dollars and years of time had been spent on her musical education. Ten years after marriage Mary can't play "The Maiden's Prayer," and when you ask for a little music she says, "Why, I haven't touched a piano in years and I don't believe I have sung anything but lullabies since my first baby was born."

When you exclaim in horror at her having let her talent rust out she says apologetically that John doesn't care for music. When you ask John why he doesn't read, as he used to, he says that Mary isn't interested in books and likes to play cards of an evening, or that he has given up telling stories because Mary thought he made a buffoon of himself.

Neither husband nor wife intended to block the other's development, but they did it just as effectually by their indifference as they could have done by a malicious plan. For the finer flowers of life must have the warm sun of appreciation shine upon them if they are to grow and flourish, and this congenial temperature they seldom find at home.

Of course if we brought any intelligence to bear—which we do not—upon the great problem of how to be happy though married, husbands and wives would not be guilty of the crime of hindering each other's development in any line. They would perceive the importance of introducing new interests, new enthusiasms, new sympathies into their lives to take the place of the old ones of which time is bound to rob them.

That would make a woman encourage her husband to develop every possible power of mind and body, to use his talents, to study, to learn, to grow, instead of sinking to a mere money-making machine, or an automaton that worked on a shuttle between home and office, and has no knowledge or interest outside of the shop.

It would make the man encourage his wife to keep up her little accomplishments, to practice her music, to keep up her painting and drawing, to pursue whatever studies she had taken up before marriage, to even go in for clubs and movements if she has executive ability, or to become a champion tennis or golf player if she has athletic tendencies.

He would help her develop whatever facility she had into a faculty instead of letting her degenerate into a flabby, peevish, aimless creature whose whole horizon is bounded by her own home and a bargain sale.

Nothing would do more to eliminate the dullnes of married life than for husbands and wives to try to help each other to make the best of themselves, instead of praying for grace and patience to stand each other, as they do now.

Indeed, it is the duty of husbands and wives to try to develop each other. If a man marries a girl who has had little opportunities of education and who is not bookish, instead of giving up his own reading and sinking to her plane of illiteracy he should read to her, talk to her about books and try to get her interested in them. He should try to lift her up instead of letting her be a millstone about his neck to pull him down.

Men are much to blame when they have blockhead wives, for there are very few women who will not respond to their husband's interest in their development, and who are not willing to work and study if their husbands desire them to.

Of course, it must be admitted that when husbands and wives undertake to correct each other's faults they tread on dangerous ground, because they strike a death blow at vanity. Each likes to believe that he or she is perfect in the eyes of the other, and it is a shock to discover that the one whom you suppose has regarded you as an angel considers your taste in novels that of a chambermaid, or the being whom you supposed regarded you as a hero shudders when she sees you eat peas.

Still the thing can be done if it is done tactfully and gently. Love is an anaesthetic under whose influence even faults can be amputated without pain, and certainly the marriages in which affection and interest never die are those in which the husband and wife help each other to a mutual growth and development.

THE BEAUTY SHOP.

Outside of the large laboratories in which various cosmetics are produced as a side line, there are in our otherwise orderly country a total of nearly 500 face foundries, the output of which is valued according to industrial census reports at exceeding $36,000,000.

These are all beauty shop preparations. They are not health foods or medicinal agents. They are merely for use in dolling up a dame's face in a way in which she imagines it is being beautified. They include hair dyes, complexion powders, face enamels, toilet waters, grease paints, creams, skin bleaches, beauty washes and other make-up preparations.

During the late unpleasantness they were kept up as war paint industries, but the government has not been patting them on the back. In fact, one of the white-domed scientists of the administration comes out in a booklet in which he sneers at the whole programme of gilding the human visage. According to his point of view, it is mostly piffle, and exercise and clean water would do more toward glorifying Marianna's bean than all the face creams and rouges in perdition. He says that Epsom salts is the basis of a great many cosmetics. It is bought at four dollars a hundred weight and when boxed for the boudoir brings better than four dollars a pound!

Incidentally, he gives a list of seventeen deadly poisons that are being regularly used in different brands of face enamels and beauty washes. The wonder is that so many women are alive today. One set of preparations will intoxicate if merely inhaled. Possibly the skirt uses this with the idea that it will make her sweetheart drunk enough to propose. If a woman should happen to sop up a thimbleful of some of these patterns of skin bleach she would spend the night in a morgue. Lucretia Borgia didn't have half the repertoire of some of these high-geared genuises who put up prescriptions for a modern beauty doctor.

What is it all about anyhow?

Women do not kalsomine for the purpose of entertaining one another. They know that they cannot deceive or hoodwink their own sex. The fact is that they think a man likes a highly-colored, highly spiced, and highly-flavored woman. If she looks a bit devilish and smells like the mysterious interior of a joss house she is presumed to be inresistibly attractive. It used to be that a woman's downfall—her career of deception, began when she first took to rubbing henna in her graying locks, but now the high schools are full of baby-faced flappers who carmine their lips and pencil their eyebrows every day.

The beauty shops are not monopolized, by dumpy dowagers having their mushes ironed out. The crowd is more likely to be made up of movie maids of pert 17 who take the whole bill of fare and who know more about mixing colors than Rubens or Titian ever did—in fact, they consider Alma Reubens as a rather poor fish as a decorative artist. There are dinky little girls of 15 whose kisses leave a crimson mark. They are not content with being chickens; they want to be birds of radiant plumage and rich coloring. They begin early and they sample all offerings. If this thing keeps up the mother of the future will begin painting Mabel when she is in the cradle.

Heaven help her and the rest of us when she grows up.

The beauty business doesn't seem to concern itself with law or regulation. In one State out of eighty samples examined the chemists found thirty illegal preparations and but when somebody starts to make a fuss about it, the authorities throw up their hands and exclaim: "Oh, well, what's the use? It's the vogue."

And that seems to settle it.

THE DANGEROUS AGE OF MAN.

BY NELL CASSIDY.

It occurs rather late in a man's life, does the dangerous age, and it really isn't—except reflexively.

In rare cases the symptoms do not become active, or are present in a mild form. In the majority of men, however, they are unmistakable, and include: a thickening of the neck, thinning of the hair, marked abdominal expansion, enlargement of the amour propre, and a hectic interest in the opposite sex. These symptoms are invariably accompanied by delusions, a species of amorous megalomania, in which the subject imagines he possesses a powerful, mysterious and irresistible attraction for femininity in general.

He classifies them ornithologically—and discriminately. Those over 20 are either hens or pelicans. The former are substantial, sensible, experienced—and mature. The latter are the attenuated, "girlish" varieties; eager, wistful, febrilely vivacious, saccharine, or acidulated—the perennially immature.

Hens and pelicans interest him not at all, and he ignores them completely in his avid pursuit of squabs and chickens. He has become au fait at the game, a connoisseur, an experienced hunter, who picks his birds, or rather is picked by them, and often quite thoroughly, too.

For the ultra modern young person whom he unctuously designates as "chicken"—a prototype of Owen Johnson's "Salamander"—this middle-aged Don Juan is a veritable find, the bird of tradition, the prolific producer of golden eggs, and to encourage him to superfecundity, she employs all her blandishments, up to the point of reciprocity. That, she never considers, nor is it necessary, for the victim's fatuity [illegible] her to gather up the stakes [illegible] the game before it is quite [illegible] settle the score.

Remember the wail of the "unfortunate" female in the [illegible] of yesterday, "The woman pays!"? Well, she doesn't. It is the man who pays, and he doesn't get value received, either.

This youthful siren is a very [illegible] person in her way, with a flair for the exploitation of mature admirers of the susceptible age. There lurks cool calculation behind the artfully tender glances from under her cosmetic-laden lashes. To him, however, she is sweetly ingenuous, full of graces, originality and charm, and he reads all sorts of complexities into that which is elemental.

He succumbs completely to the potent spell of youth, and to the illusion that it finds him [illegible]

He goes in for a systematic course of setting up exercises and applications of hair tonic with a faith that is sublime—and pathetic. He takes to spending much time and money with his tailor and haberdasher, and becomes sartorially impeccable.

To realize that he is still so dashed attractive! It accelerates his pulse alarmingly, fills him with vague and vernal yearnings—and a little yearning is a dangerous thing!

His wife? She is apt to be tremendously interested in her clubs, charities, friends, the arts, or various vital issues of the day. She is vaguely aware of his philanderings, and doesn't take them very seriously.

She perceives that the most alarming symptoms of her aberrant spouse are indeed the [illegible] manifestations of adolescence—the adolescence of senility.

A Barometric Violin.

Abram Moses, a violinist of this city, is the possessor of what might be called a barometric violin. Some time after Mr. Moses bought it he noticed that at certain times it exhaled a strange and subtle fragrance, like an aroma of oriental incense. Later, he observed that the fragrance was noticeable only when the weather was about to become damp. He obtained the violin in Paris some years ago when he was studying there.—[Baltimore Sun.

Apostles and Prophets Necessary

The Primitive Church and the Church of Latter Days

By DR. JAMES E. TALMAGE

Of the Council of the Twelve, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, Utah.

NOTE:—For free copies of other articles of this series, send request to the author.

We believe in the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, viz. apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc. (Articles of Faith, No. 6.)

Most people who profess belief in Christianity accept as a scriptural fact the establishment of the Church of Jesus Christ, through the Lord's personal ministry, in the early years of what we call the Christian Era, the period that has been expressively designated the meridian of time. During the many centuries between the days of Moses and the advent of Christ in the flesh, Israel had lived under the Law, between which and the Gospel a clear distinction is drawn in Scripture. Paul's explicit segregation of the two is cogent, and ample for illustration:

"But before faith came we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3:23-26.)

The Law of Moses, the schoolmaster's administration which was constituted for the discipline of a people unprepared to receive the higher tutoring of the Gospel, was fulfilled and therefore abrogated as a formal and obligatory system through the earthly ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ. While this fulfilment is evidenced by the whole tenor of New Testament Scripture, a most direct and concise declaration may be quoted with profit from the Nephite Scriptures, recorded by holy men who officiated under Divine commission on the American continent throughout a period of approximately six centuries before and four centuries after the birth of Christ. The prophet Nephi who was living at the time of our Lord's death, resurrection, and ascension, incorporates in his record the words of the Resurrected Savior as follows:

"Behold I say unto you, that the law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel: therefore, the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfill the law; therefore it hath an end. Behold, I do not destroy the prophets, for as many as have not been fulfilled in me, verily I say unto you, shall all be fulfilled." (Book of Mormon, 3 Nephi 15:4-6.)

A studious reading of the four Gospels demonstrates that while our Lord recognized the Jewish hierarchy as administrators of an existing system of government, and complied with all lawful requirements thereof as such applied to Himself, He proclaimed the Gospel of the Kingdom in place of the Mosaic Law, and ordained men to a higher Priesthood than that of Aaron under which the priests of the Jews claimed to operate. He commissioned the Twelve Apostles (Matt. 10:1; Mark 3:14; Luke 4:13), and afterward the Seventy (Luke 10:1.) Unto the eleven Apostles who had remained faithful the Lord gave the parting instruction, shortly before His ascension: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The Apostles labored with devoted energy. "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." (See Mark 16:15-20.)

The Apostles clearly understood that though the Master had passed from earth He had left with them authority and commandment to build up the Church as an established organization. One of their early official acts was to fill the vacancy in their own body, which had been created by the apostasy and death of Judas Iscariot. It is evident that they considered the apostolic body to comprise twelve members and that the needs of the Church required the organization to be made complete. By official action Matthias was added to the eleven. (See Acts 1:21-26.)

Under the administration of the Apostles and others who officiated by their direction in position of lesser authority, the Church of Jesus Christ grew in membership and influence. For ten years or more following our Lord's ascension, Jerusalem was the headquarters of the Church, but branches were established in the outlying provinces, and these branches, or local "churches" were officered by bishops, deacons, and other ministers, who were chosen and ordained by apostolic authority.

We find, operating in their sacred callings in the Primitive Church, apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, elders, bishops, priests and deacons. The purpose of these several offices is declared to be "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." (Eph. 4:12.)

Every office so established is necessary to the development of the Church, which has been aptly compared to a perfect body with its several members, each adapted to particular function and all coordinated for the common good. In an organization planned and established through Divine wisdom, there are neither superfluities nor parts wanting. Eye, ear, hand, and foot, each is essential to the symmetry and physical perfection of the body; in the Church no one in authority can rightly say to his fellow "I have no need of thee." (See I Cor. 12:12-21.)

As we shall see in the next article of this series, the Primitive Church was of comparatively short duration. The world fell into spiritual darkness, and a restoration of power and commission from the Heavens became necessary to the reestablishment of the Church with its ancient blessings and privileges. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints proclaims the imperative need "of the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church," and solemnly avers that through the ministration of heavenly beings the Church of Jesus Christ is again operative on earth, for the salvation of mankind both living and dead. The plan of organization and government in the restored Church is that of olden time, comprising the functions of apostles, prophets, high priests, evangelists, seventies, elders, bishops, priests, teachers and deacons, and membership open to all who shall come, believing in the Lord Jesus Christ and willing to obey His commandments. (See Doctrine & Covenants, sec. 107.)

"STUDIES IN LITERATURE."

Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch Initiates the Novice Into Highbrow Pleasures—Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Recollections" Seem to be Chiefly About Her Own Novels—The Bible of Belgium, or the Legend of Lyl Ulenspiegel, Translated for the First Time—Other Books.

BY GORDON RAY YOUNG.

"Studies in Literature."

The joys of the highbrow surpass ...ables and all that sort of ... The average person doesn't know how much good fun is to be had out of the authors and books ...ed as "classics," and highbrow. ...s quite a pose these days to pretend that one has read Shakespeare. Intelligent people who do not happen also to be literary, look askance whoever mentions the Elizabeth... Yet those plays were written ...the roughnecks of Shakespeare's ...and had to hold their own ...bear-baiting and such popular sport. Of course, the way school ...ers jam Shakespeare down the ...s of grammar and high school ...is enough to make the children ever after detest Shakespeare. There is perhaps nothing that tends to destroy one's joy in literature so much as having had it in "school." ...f one goes at the highbrow just as one would go at a ..., the surprise is likely enough ...similar to M. Jourdain's discovery, that all his life he had been talking prose.

The best way to start being highbrow is to get hold of some good book that talks about various authors, something by Hazlitt, Coleridge, Andrew Lang, even Macaulay if one likes hypnotic prose, or Saintsbury, ...Dowson, or Gosse, or Arthur Symons or John Addington Symons—or Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch. Which is in "Studies in Literature" (G. P. Putnam's Sons.).

[illegible] fashion to ruin a man's reputation with the crowd is to announce that he is a Fellow of Jesus College and King Edward VII. Professor of English Literature in the University of Cambridge and a few other things of the kind. But Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch has not been ...onised by attaining those distinctions. His "On the Art of Writing" of a few years ago was a miracle of interesting common sense. The "Studies in Literature" is a little esoteric, but not forbiddingly so. I know of no critic, not even Leigh Hunt, who always wrote as though the reader were sitting on his ..., that establishes a more informal atmosphere than Quiller-Couch. He is witty, he is not dogmatic; he is agreeable, but in no sense evasive. One doesn't have to wonder what he means, not even when he writes on metaphysics, or rather on metaphysical poets. One may never have heard of John Donne, or more likely have never heard of Traherne and Crashaw; but those writers are made interesting here and something of value is established.

The chapter on Swinburne is, I ... solemnly, the only enlightening and comprehensive article ever written in English about the poet—the poet, as distinguished from his ... Quiller-Couch begins by saying that he is going to be as reticent as the others—but he isn't. The whole story is yet to be learned. ... loosied (Sir Arthur calls it "being tactful") in his biography. Though British gentlemen of letters have cried aloud for twenty years, ...unmentionable shame of another ..., they have banded together in a conspiracy of silence to keep the world from knowing that Swinburne was a drunkard.

Sir Arthur writes of two poets—two great novelists. He advises a careful study of George Meredith's poetry, and suggests how to go about it to creep to the inner and hidden. He seems a little regretful—just a shade—that Thomas Hardy left fiction, and such tower... powerful fiction, even to build "The Dynasts" "the grandest structure planned and raised in England in our time."

Other subjects discussed are ballads and the terms "classical," "romantic," Coleridge, Matthew Arnold, Charles Reade and "Patriotism in English Literature." And whosoever wonders what it is that highbrows get out of these books that make them read until they get ...sighted, dyspeptic and humpshouldered, let him experiment with Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch.

"A Writer's Recollections."

Biographies, reminiscences, recollections, memoirs, are always given exaggerated respect. Reviewers put on their Sunday manners. As a ... thing reminiscences are ... and interesting—anybody's reminiscences. But I think that Mrs. Humphry Ward in these two volumes of "A Writer's Recollections" (Harper & Bros.) has scamped her work. For thirty years she has been a conspicuous literary figure; and by family and social connections closely associated with the most distinguished figures of her day; so one has the right to expect something more than several hundred pages of drivel about her novels, what the critics said of them, what friends named and unnamed wrote her about them, what she tried to do in them and how comfortable she feels in the knowledge that "Robert Elsmere" is still a marketable product.

Perhaps the recollections were written at odd moments, at moments of relaxation. They are formless, ...ky, and carelessly put down. One is informed three times in as many pages that Mr. Humphry Ward was "fellow and tutor at Brasenose College." The first half of the book is taken up with childhood and girlhood and family affairs—certainly not the sort of recollections that one expects or wishes for from Mrs. Humphry Ward. And she seems a little awed, proudly awed, by the fact that Matthew Arnold was her uncle. At the other end of the book her "recollections" are cut off some twenty years ago, and a chapter of comment on popular ... is supposed to bridge the gap. The book is full of such sentences as "How can I tell of So-and-So ..." though a writer of her experience should not know that the planning and rough carpenter work of an author should be done in private—not stuffed into a book for which one is expected to pay $6. And it is somewhat exasperating to find her referring one to the biography by So-and-So to get the picture of Such-and-Such, whom she knew very well.

She is at great length to tell of her Spanish studies, and how hard she worked, and of how many times she rewrote "Robert Elsmere;" and when she meets a great man, like Gladstone or Henry James, about all she seems to have remembered is what he said of her books. There is a short, vivid anecdote pertaining to Swinburne; some jumbled reminiscences of Pater and Jowett that are pleasing, and paragraphs about less-well-remembered characters that do not disappoint; but as a book of reminiscences it is unmitigatedly disappointing—the more so because no woman of her day had greater opportunities for meeting people, for being friends with great persons. And she tells of her own novels, of herself—all about herself. The only anecdote relative to Browning (she felt that she became more intimate with him after his death) deals with how he and she put their heads together at a dinner where he was the "lion" and ignored the remainder of the table.

"Success or Struggle."

"Success or Struggle," a curious book by an unnamed author, published by Woodlee Witrox of Los Angeles, does not answer Juliet's question as to what's in a name, but it does maintain that there is so much in a mere name, so many unvarying and analayzable influences bearing upon the ordered array of letters that a science devoted to the study of these influences may justify the title of onomatology.

This book is rather tantalizing. Israel Zangwill is quoted as saying that he not only believes there is some "secret and mysterious influence in a name;" and the author, having gathered other quotations from people of importance showing that they sensed what he now confirms, contents himself merely with affirming that such a science as onomatoloy exists, that a man by changing his name may somewhat affect his fortune, but does not whisper an enlightening word as to how this most desirable and easiest of feats may be done—that is, may be done in a way propitious to the "influences." In fact the book is more like an introduction than a whole book. Curiosity is aroused; arguments, very well maintained though strange, put the skeptic into a receptive mood, the toes tingle with eagerness to proceed with the initiation and—the book closes. The sense of being thwarted is all the more strong, because the author has with skill built up his arguments and testimony; but discourteously withhholds the really important evidence, the proof.

"Nights in London."

"Nights in London" was published some years ago on the other side of the water; and in it one may find the genesis of "Limehouse Nights," the collection of immortal tales that enabled Thomas Burke to leap for a comet and soar blazing into the heavens. A new edition now comes to Americans through Henry Holt & Co., and one looking for something new, something with a twang of novelty and flashes of poetry, would do well to take a peek.

Thomas Burke confessionally admits that he knows London nights and streets with all the intimacy that comes to one who has wandered about for a place to lay his head. Although there is a little of the young man's affectation in discrediting the consciously Bohemian quarters—we all at some time or other repudiate the Bohemians—and he is not without traces of attitudinizing, it is nevertheless an unusual and picturesque book. The night life and darkened by-ways, the haunts of the ruffian and the dangerous, the pale faces and quick greetings of street girls, the spontaneous camaraderie of the outcast, are themes and pictures that he offers generously. Some of the nights have almost a narrative form, others are purely descriptive; and here and there one catches phrases and sometimes incidents that seem to have been the leaven that later developed into "Limehouse Nights."

Mr. Burke has a quality that is exceptional in his writing, a quality that for want of something more adequate must be called "poetic." The vivid, striking, beauteous, or more often dramatic phrase comes from his pen effortless. Also he has a sense of form, his chapters, episodes, incidents are given a structural body that is pleasing; and as for "atmosphere"—it is the preeminent distinction of "Nights in London."

"The Legend of the Glorious Adventures of Tyl Ulenspiegel."

This book of Charles de Coster has been called "The Bible of the Flemings." The first English translation comes from Geoffrey Whitworth, and is accompanied by twenty wood cuts by Albert Delstanche, through the press of Robert M. McBride.

Everybody was pretty much surprised in 1914 when little Belgium flung herself stubbornly across the pathway of the Germans. But nobody need to have been. The Flemings have fought a hundred Thermopylaes; and once before, those burgher citizens fought and broke down the dominant militaristic power of Europe. This book by De Coster reveals the spirit and something of the warfare with which the Flemings met Philip and the Duke of Alva; and though the book was written only some two score years ago, that spirit of fortitude, of defiance, of sacrifice is old, very old. Caesar himself said that the Belgians were the bravest of all the tribes, and though there is perhaps little if any of that ancient blood remaining in the land, the spirit is there. And because of that spirit, De Coster's book at once became popular, in less than forty years it became the "Bible of the Flemings." It was the ashes of Claes that beat upon the breast of Tyl Ulenspiegel; and when the star clock struck its fatal hour, it was the ashes of Liege, the ashes and blood of the women and children of Namur and Ghent and Brussels and Antwerp that beat upon the breasts of the men of Flanders, rousing them implacably, indominably.

"The Legend of the Glorious Adventures of Tyl Ulenspiegel" is much like a picaresque story—and would be just that were it not at times ornamented with the supernatural, and, particularly toward the end, suffused with the intense spirit of the Fleming patriot. Tyl is a robust, adventurous character. He and Lamme, the prodigious eater, are Rabelaisian characters. Tyl begins early to play pranks. He puts pepper under the tail of a monastic donkey, hides in a beehive and pulls the hair and beard of thieves; being sent on a pilgrimage to Rome because of disrespectful comment on priests he plays various jokes, which culminate in his posing as an artist at the court of the King of Hesse. Before the curtains are down before the walls he is supposed to have decorated, Tyl declares that only those of truly noble blood will be able to perceive his pictures; those of plebeian and low blood will see nothing but a blank wall.

The story assumes a more sober, a truly grim, aspect after Tyl returns home to find his father, Claes, being burned as a heretic; and wearing ashes from his father's body about his neck, this hero bends every effort toward vengeance. The mad Katherine with her devil lover, the beautiful Nele, loving Tyl faithfully from childhood and at last reclaiming him from the gallows, where he is about to swing for having rebuked a Flemish general who did not properly respect his word; the gluttonous Lamme with the bulbous stomach and touching faithfulness toward his vanished wife, the loyal and dear Soetkin, mother of Tyl, and Claes of the kind and jolly heart, are true and strong characters. One has met people in meeting them.

The book gets an artistic strength and a somber background by carrying somewhat parallel with Tyl's growth a sketch of Philip, the Spanish King, the religious misanthrope who delighted to torture animals before he grew powerful enough to burn heretics; and there is no passage in it more vivid or more satisfying than that in which Katherine relates her witch vision and tells of how Claes and King Charles, Philip's father, were received in heaven.

"America in France."

I never did know just why Frederick Palmer, veteran war correspondent, was turned into a major and attached to the staff of Gen. Pershing. I supposed that it has something to do with keeping other correspondents from getting news they shouldn't have; and on the principle of fighting the devil with fire and putting one thief to catch another, the powers that be conscripted a wily old veteran like Frederick Palmer to head off the audacious men of the press. No one, unless he wanted the job for himself, begrudged the appointment. No one, even if he did want the appointment, could begrudge it after reading "America in France" (Dodd, Mead & Co.,) for in this book Maj. Palmer has told with thorough-going completeness just how the American army came to France, how it was housed, trained, treated and finally inducted into the first line trenches and then in a few brief weeks of terrific fighting won its objectives—including that of high glory!

We, far behind the lines and still doing the little peace-time work, laughed at Hindenburg and the Kaiser for saying that America would do nothing in this war; but if we had known as much about the difficulties of transporting, feeding, training and keeping up the morale of troops, as did Hindenburg and the Kaiser we would probably have sympathized with their optimism. The magnitude of that task has not before been brought so forcibly to the layman as in Maj. Palmer's account. The magnitude of the work was enormous, enormous before an American gun could be fired toward Berlin. To officers working in feverish haste, all supplies seemed interminably lost and for the most part they seem to have been. But the French helped, the British helped, and the American officers helped themselves. If they wanted supplies they would not be satisfied with the official report that they were not to be had but went up and down the country until they found what they were looking for and at once put it to use.

Maj. Palmer had unusual opportunities for becoming familiar with all the development work and for having authentic accounts of the fighting. He traces every phase of that development and gives a clear, inspiriting report of the fighting from the first casualty in the Lorraine to the wiping out of the St. Mihiel salient and the Argonne battle. There is no doubt about "America in France" being, and remaining, the book that tells the story of how and what our army did "over there."

Books and Authors.

Hereafter the complete works of Alfred Noyes will be in the hands of Frederick A. Stokes Company, publisher of Mr. Noyes's "Collected Poems." Stokes has just taken over "Poems," "The Golden Hynde" and "Flower of Old Japan" from the Macmillan Company. Mr. Noyes has a total of eleven volumes of poetry, "Walking Shadows," a book of short stories, and "Open Boats," a true account of U-boat atrocities.

Several years ago E. P. Dutton & Co. published in the Wisdom of the East series, a little book of selections from Chinese poems, called "A Lute of Jade," compiled by A. Cranmer-Byng. For ten years the book has been steadily selling and increasing in demand. The new copies have hitherto been imported from England, but Duttons are printing an American edition that will be on the market within a few days.

Boni and Liveright are publishing three books of importance on the reconstruction: "Americanized Socialism," by James Mackaye, which discusses socialism and Bolshevikism; "The German Myth," by Gustavus Myers, which presents the falsity of Germany's socialistic claims; and "The Great Change," by Charles W. Wood, which consists largely of interviews with important men of educational, industrial and political affairs.

B. W. Huebsch is issuing a book called "Women and the Labor Party," in which Rebecca West and ten other prominent English women present their views. Mr. Huebsch is also publishing "The British Revolution and the American Democracy," by Normal Angell.

Rev. Abraham Mitrie Rihbany, author of "The Syrian Christ" and "A Far Journey" (Houghton Mifflin Company) has been delegated by the Syrians in this country to further the establishment of an independent government in their crippled nation. Other countries would like to have a hand in this rehabilitation work, but America's former success in the uplift of weaker governments has so impressed Mr. Rihbany that he prefers her aid rather than that of any other nation.

At the age of 21 Abraham Rihbany came to America a penniless Syrian. His rise to the prominence of an influential Boston minister and author, is truly dramatic. Such a career is fittingly climaxed by this latest enterprise of Mr. Rihbany's—the caving of Syria.

Presenting a contrast, it is hoped, to the Peace Conference of 1919, the Century Company will publish early in January a book entitled, "The Congress of Vienna." It is made up of material gathered from memoirs of the participants of the congress. The book is based on the researches of Friedrich Freksa; the translation is by Harry Hansen, who also supplies notes and an introduction.

"The Congress of Vienna" should have special interest at this time. It is a story of social and political intrigue, a narrative of that shameless bartering of small nationalities by people in high places about which President Wilson has spoken in eloquent and indignant language. Before the reader, the publishers say, there pass in review such figures as Wellington, Marie Louise and Napoleon's ill-fated son, Frederick William of Prussia, Hardenberg, the fascinating Countess Zichy, Gentz, Dalberg and many a crafty statesman whose influence is still felt in the world. The Peace Conference of 1919, it is safe to say, will be a contrast to the Vienna Congress in some respects at least. Next year at Versailles the democracies will settle the affairs of the world; a little over a hundred years ago at Vienna, kings, queens and princes danced and frolicked while Czar Alexander of Russia, Metternich, Talleyrand, Humboldt and Castelreagh parceled out millions of human beings by "divine right."

Rex Beach, whose just published novel, "The Winds of Chance," has already been passed through several reprintings, has become very valuable to movie managers. It is said he has, apart from his genius for spinning yarns, a veritable gift for writing captions when accompanying pictures require explaining. But Mr. Beach has decided that he prefers to stick to novel writing and is already planning another story on which he soon hopes to begin work. "The Winds of Chance" reintroduces 'Poleon Doret, the gay-hearted, laughing French Canadian. Though Mr. Beach had nominated another man for the hero, he told Harper & Brothers that his love for 'Poleon made him weave the greater part of the plot round his kindly personality.

Stephane Lauzanne, the distinguished editor of Le Matin, whose book, "Fighting France" has been one of the most widely discussed war books of the present season is about to return to France. Several farewell dinners have been given in New York in M. Lauzanne's honor prior to his departure for the larger cities of the Middle West, where he is to deliver a series of lectures on the part France will play in the coming peace conferences.

Andre Fribourg, the author of "Croire," which the Macmillan Company has just published in an English translation under the title of "The Flaming Crucible," was born in Burgundy about thirty years ago. It was his early ambition to write and teach history, and in realizing this, he overcame seemingly insuperable material obstacles, thanks to an indomitable energy.

"I began," he says, "with an income of 4 cents a day. It was a capital preparation for the war."

In due time, he became professor of history and geography at the Venerable College Sainte-Barbe and at the relatively parvenue College Chaptal, and engaged in researches concerning the France of the revolution. He published the more significant results of his researches in learned reviews and in different volumes, one of which was awarded the Peyrat prize at the academy.

On the 4th of August, 1914, this historian — professor — writer, quits his dear, dusty archives to become Private Fribourg of the One Hundred and Sixth Infantry. He saw service at the Marne, Verdun and on the heights of the Meuse. He was wounded twice, and ultimately discharged, nearly blind, and having lost the sense of smell and taste.

His book, "The Flaming Crucible," is the outcome of his experiences.

"THE GREATER PATRIOTISM."

THE GREATER PATRIOTISM: Public Addresses by John Lewis Griffiths. Memoir by Caroline Henderson Griffiths. Introduction bi Hilaire Belloc. John Lane Company, New York.

John Lewis Griffiths, the late American Consul-General at London, worked before and during the war for a better understanding and more sympathetic relations between England and America. That he did much acceptable and successful work is evinced by the length of his service and his prominence in English social life. He acquired particular distinction as a public speaker, and these are addresses given during the past fifteen years. Through them all, no matter what the occasion or subject, runs the philosophy of peace, of understanding, of friendships. He told of American ideals and purposes, not boastingly or apologetically, but as a matter of important information.

Uncle Sam to the Foreground.

FROM ISOLATION TO LEADERSHIP: A Review of American Foreign Policy. By John Holladay Latane. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, New York.

There have recently appeared many books reviewing our foreign policy, all of them so far as I know authoritative and most of them of formidable dimensions—certainly big enough to frighten off the shy seeker for a little understanding. Prof. Latane's book is small, compact, illuminating and entertaining. It seems to have been designed for the man who reads as he runs, and explains lucidly such—to the average person—vague political phrsases, as the Monroe Doctrine, the Balance of Power, the Open Door Policy, Pan-Americanism.

The book has no political bias, and its purpose is expressed in the title: to show the processes by which the United States emerged from a policy of "no entangling alliances" and the isolation of the Monroe Doctrine to a dominant position amid the council of nations. Prof. Latane is among those historians above price—and scarce as pink pearls—who relate their country's history without throwing sops to pride and prejudice. It is a straightforward account.

Prof. Latane is professor of American history at Johns Hopkins University.

The Romance of Philadelphia.

THE ROMANCE OF OLD PHILADELPHIA. By John T. Faris. J. B. Lippincott Company.

There is no American city that has a more interesting and picturesque background than Philadelphia. Founded in the earliest wilderness as a city for visionaries, it became the nation's capital, and has continued one of the leading commercial cities as well as sharing with Boston the distinction of being the seat of tradition of aristocracy. Mr. Faris confines his study to colonial days, from the founding of the city until the capital was moved, and tells of quaint life and sturdy courage of the first citizens, their social life, the beginnings of commerce, the courches, marriages and courtships, and something of the part that Philadelphia played in the Revolutionary War. The book is attractively illustrated with reproductions of old pictures.

It is a curious and none too credible fact that the present day is almost without any comprehensive, authoritative, detailed accounts of the customs and manners of our forefathers, such as are contained in this romance—romance in name only, for it is based on and largely built out of documents of the Historical Society. Though the book is restricted to old Philadelphia, it is essentially an account of the precolonial and colonial days, and permits one to have an intimate understanding of the men and women that begot the nation.

PSYCHIC TENDENCIES.

PSYCHIC TENDENCIES OF TODAY. By Alfred W. Martin. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

There has at last appeared an honest book, designed for the honest, unprejudiced, doubter regarding New Thought, Christian Science and Spiritualism. The dispassionate fairness with which Alfred W. Martin has written "Psychic Tendencies of Today" distinguishes it as a singularly rare work. It is true that other investigators have made unprejudiced inquiries and reported, but for the most part these were a little technical and over the interest of the average reader.

Mr. Martin begins with a historical survey, indicates the analogy between Apollonius and Mrs. Eddy, suggests certain ancient beliefs that have reappeared with new fervor in our times, and discusses the potency and limitations of mental healing. He outlines the development of New Thought and shows something of its progression. One of the interesting and timely chapters is devoted to inspecting Sir Oliver Lodge's "Raymond" and other current evidence of immortality. Mr. Martin does not doubt immortality, but rather believes in it, though he expresses very well why he cannot countenance the so-called evidence of even such men as Sir Oliver Lodge; and he shows, with no indication of willfulness or prejudice, what a flawed thinker Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is.

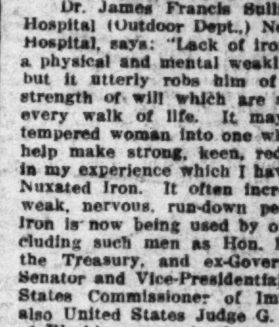
ARE YOU LOSING YOUR GRIP ON HEALTH

Your Blood May Be Starving for Want of Iron—Making You Weak, Nervous, Irritable and Exhausted.

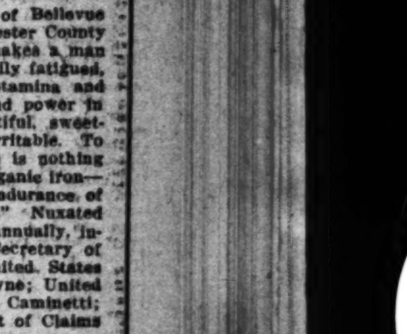
Nuxated Iron increases the Red Blood Corpuscles and builds up the strength, energy and endurance of delicate, run-down people in two weeks' time in many instances.

Thousands of men and women are impairing their constitutions, laying themselves open to illness and literally losing their grip on health, simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.,) New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to succes and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time." Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; United States Commissioner of Immigration Hon. Anthony Caminetti; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington, and others.



The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. Nuxated Iron is dispensed in this city by Owl Drug Co., Dickinson Drug Co., B. & B. Drug Co., Sun Drug Co., Boswell & Noyes and other druggists.



Sims's Flag Caused Excitement.

Most harmonious is the working of the two navies (British and American.) Admiralty House is quite a home for the Americans, and, needless to say, the British vice-admiral, with his years of sea life, is an interesting figure to the young officers from the States. So close is the co-operation of the two services that when the British vice-admiral was on leave some time ago, Admiral Sims, the senior American naval officer, hoisted his flag at Queenstown, and through the island went the rumor that Ireland had been handed over to the United States.—[London Times.

LABOR STANDARDS

The Woman Question Bobs up Once More.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Dec. 25.—Throughout the war the government used its influence to insure certain standards of comfort and safety for the workmen in the factories which executed war contracts. Factory owners in general co-operated enthusiastically, for these higher standards promoted efficiency. But now that war contracts are being cancelled, the power of the government to suggest and advise in this matter is at an end.

The whole matter of labor standards now rests with the States. Will those States which have few or no labor standards create new ones, and will the States that have admirable labor standards enforce them? These are questions now being debated by those interested in the success of American industry, in the smooth progress of reconstruction, and in the resolutions passed by the recent annual conference of Governors, which have not yet been made public.

The Department of Labor at Washington emphasizes particularly the great danger involved in abrogating the labor standards for women in industry advocated by the government during the war. Many people are voicing the opinion that now that the war is over the women will pour out of industry as rapidly as they poured in. The authors of this opinion usually dispose of the future of these women by marrying them off to returning soldiers with whom they live happily ever after in the shelter of their homes. The fact that women have always been employed in American factories, and that there were women's trade unions as far back as the middle of the nineteenth century, does not seem to have gained the attention that it should. "There is nothing new about women being in industry, women have always worked," says Miss Mary Anderson, assistant director of the women in industry service of the Labor Department. "In 1910 there were 8,000,000 of them in gainful occupations. Those who have gone into war industries are, for the most part, women who have worked before. They have been garment workers or waitresses or workers in other occupations to which they must go back."

Before the war the problems connected with women in industry were just as complicated, if not more so, than they are now. Many cases existed where women were doing work that only men had done before. They were almost as much investigated. Reports were turned out on the status of women working in certain occupations, some of which revealed the existence of shocking conditions, but somehow these reports failed to obtain results. The public was not interested.

With the entrance of the United States into the war, many more women poured into industry. The woman factory worker became a popular figure. She was helping to win the war. People immediately became excited as to her welfare; employers began writing articles about the efficiency of their women employees; physicians began issuing warnings concerning her health; fashion designers began drawing her uniforms, and a whole staff of photographers was kept busy taking pictures of women engaged in various interesting factory processes. Women who did not work in factories suddenly became interested in those that did, and were infatigable in working for their welfare.

Out of all this popular enthusiasm for the woman war worker certain splendid reforms in the conditions of women in industry were brought about. In the first place the public was converted to the idea that women should receive as much pay as men for the same amount of work. This was a tremendous victory, for up to the outbreak of the war the general opinion had been that under no conceivable circumstances should a woman be paid as much as a man.

The second victory was the cleaning up of hundreds of dilapidated factories; the installation of correct facilities, and, in some, the establishment of rest rooms and cafeterias.

In some States having fairly good laws concerning the employment of women at night and in various dangerous occupations, an attempt was made to abrogate these laws for the period of the war. Men were leaving in huge numbers for the front, and the factories had to have some sort of labor to keep the wheels moving. But this attempt was blocked by delegations of women appointed by their clubs to look after the welfare of women in factories, who established powerful lobbies at the State capitals and managed to defeat the necessary legislation whenever it came up. Only a few States managed to get by with the abrogation of their pre-war labor laws.

No woman should be permitted to work more than eight hours in any one day or for more than forty-eight hours in any one week. The time when the work of the women employees should begin and when it should end should be posted in a conspicuous place in each workroom and a record kept of the overtime of each woman worker. Half-holidays on Saturdays are urged, but in any case every woman must have one day of rest out of every seven.

Wages should be established on the basis of occupation and not on the basis of sex. Women doing the same work as men should receive the same wages, with such proportionate increases as the men are receiving in the same industry. This standard has received the indorsement of the American Federation of Labor.

Every factory should provide facilities for comfort and sanitation. It should comply with its State regulations in the matter of safety appliances and precautions against accident from machinery, danger from fire and exposure to dust, fumes or other occupational hazards.

Throughout the period of the war the influence of the government and the public opinion has been sufficient to get most of these labor standards in regard to women introduced. But now the government's influence is waning, and public opinion is occupied with other important questions. The woman war worker may change from a war princess to a peace Cinderella and hardly anyone will notice it—unless the woman worker herself chooses to make a fuss about it.

Everybody should read the magnificent Midwinter Number of The Times, out January 28th, 1919. Wait for it.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT OF THE MANY possibilities and advantages you might have over your competitors if you could only speak Spanish? Just think of the many big concerns in America soliciting Spanish correspondents along the border and in the largest cities! Think of the United States positions in Postoffices, Courts and Diplomatic Missions, and think that 50 lessons and a very small amount of money will open wide the gates to Mexico, Central and South America, Cuba, Porto Rico and Philippines, the new and coming countries after the war.

Don't you think you ought to come and consult with me on a matter that might change the course of your life, as it has done for thousands of my pupils during the 19 years I have taught Spanish in California? PROF. RICARDO URIBE, 405 Consolidated Realty Bldg.

I have had a wide and successful experience as a letter executive and am now employed by a $36,000,000 company. Full particulars in first interview.

Automobiles for Sale.

ATTENTION, MR. TOURIST.

You are reading these columns today to either rent or purchase a used car for the time that you will be in the city. You want a good machine at a reasonable figure and one that will have appearance as well. We have several such cars, both roadsters and touring. We know that it will be less expensive for you to purchase one of these cars than to rent one for several months' use. We have a special plan that will convince you that you need not worry, but that they will be sold when you are ready to leave.

Our business is the sale of new cars and practically every used car offered for sale has been accepted on a new car, therefore you cannot classify us with the average used car speculator. A large number of our new car sales depend on our ability to accept used cars in exchange; we must make rapid sales in our USED CAR DEPARTMENT so that we can continue to accept such deals, therefore we are not only certain to place these cars in excellent condition so that they will sell rapidly, but we place an attractive price on them as well, commensurate with their condition. In addition to this you will be dealing with a company of excellent reputation, financially sound, and one that is willing to stand behind every sale. DON'T FAIL TO INVESTIGATE.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

CHANDLER SIX TOURINGS
and CHUMMY ROADSTERS.

You do not dare to purchase a CHANDLER until you have investigated the REBUILT, REFINISHED, FULLY GUARANTEED ones that we are offering at a range of prices from $800 to $1800, on TERMS. You cannot respect yourself as a wise purchaser unless you at least learn about these values, and what CHANDLER SERVICE and CHANDLER GUARANTEE will mean to you for the next year to come. Our business has been the marketing of CHANDLERS almost since they were first placed on the market. We know practically every Chandler owner, and we know quite a bit about the manner in which they have taken care of their cars. We will not accept a used CHANDLER in exchange on a new one if it has been abused. We do not have to. We cannot secure all the NEW CHANDLERS that there is a demand for, so you may rest assured that we are particular about the used cars we accept in exchange. If you do not believe this, try us out with some car that is not up to standard, and see how quickly we refuse it. We are not independent, but we are careful of our reputation, and we do not want to be forced to offer a poor used car for sale.

In addition to Chandlers we have many other makes of used cars, such as Hupmobile, Buick, Dodge, Cadillac, Paige, Hudson, Chandlers. We also have several cars priced as low as $175. These lower-priced cars are not overhauled or guaranteed, EXCEPT that we will GUARANTEE them to be EXACTLY as represented. You cannot go wrong as we will give you full details as to their condition. A remarkable offering in this class is a 1917 HAYNES touring car at $400.

ENCLOSED CARS—Our BEST offering in an enclosed car is a 1917 Chandler Cabriolet (3-passenger convertible) which may be used either as an open or enclosed car, having an adaptable top. This car has been driven but a few thousand miles and is as good as it appears. Price $1500. Terms.

HUPMOBILE 1916 touring car at $800. Terms. Excellent tires (five of them.) and fully guaranteed in every respect. Looks like new, runs like new, and is practically as good as a new car. See it.

WE GUARANTEE MOST OF OUR CARS, ADDING A LIBERAL SERVICE PERIOD AS WELL. IF YOU PURCHASE A GUARANTEED CAR YOU ARE THOROUGHLY PROTECTED. Our GUARANTEE is equal if not SUPERIOR to any offered by our competitors in used cars.

He has been instructed to prepare a daily record of activities at the camp since the Sixteenth Division began its work and will incorporate in it many features, such as troop training, the successful fight against the influenza epidemic and other maters.

The psychiatric board [illegible] in the case of Lieut. H. [illegible] charged with killing Capt. [illegible] Posner of the Eighty-first [illegible] on December 1, continued its work today. COURT AT MONROVIA.

Judge Taft, Attaches, [illegible] Visit Dairy Alleged to be Nuisance.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MONROVIA, Dec. 28.—[illegible] Judge Fred Taft's court, [illegible] Bailiff E. H. Hutchinson, and attorneys for both sides in the [illegible] brought by Mrs. Sarah E. [illegible] of this city to have the dairy conducted by E. P. Swann at No. [illegible] South Myrtle avenue adjudged a public nuisance, today adjourned to Monrovia to inspect the premises. The purpose of the visit, it was stated, was to ascertain the merits of the case more [illegible] than could be done by the [illegible] ing testimony of many witnesses that have been heard in court since last Thursday, when the case opened, including City Clerk Lewis F. [illegible] City Trustee E. F. Spence, and C. D. Gaylord, City Health [illegible]

Not only was the Swann dairy visited by the court, but also other dairies in town, in order to compare them with the former. It has been the contention of the plaintiff and her attorney, Rupert [illegible] who also joins in the suit as a neighboring property owner, that alleged noisome odors and a numerous breed of blue bottle flies emanate from the Swann stables. Swann, however, avers that the odors are merely that of [illegible] from near-by citrus [illegible]. Hence, Judge Taft decided the party had considerable "looking around" to do.

The court party included Attorneys William F. Palmer and [illegible] Newby, for the defense; [illegible] Mr. Turnbull, Judge [illegible] Nathan Newby, Jr., who [illegible] party in his father's car. The case has been taken under advisement.

NEW YEAR CELEBRATION.

Details of Big Programme Perfected by Committee of Citizens.

Los Angeles is to usher in the New Year with a parade through the downtown streets, a big celebration at midnight at Central Park, fireworks, bombs and illumination and all kinds of noise-making apparatus, ranging from the boy with a horn to fire bells and steam whistles. Arrangements for the celebration were perfected yesterday at a conference between representative leading citizens, Mayor Woodman and Police Commissioner Mines.

Everyone with a decorated and illuminated automobile is invited to join the parade by being in line at 6:45 o'clock p.m., at the corner of Fourteenth and Figueroa streets. The parade will start promptly at 7 o'clock and move north on Figureoa to Seventh, on Seventh to Broadway, north on Broadway to First, east on First to Spring, south on Spring to Seventh, west to Broadway, south on Broadway to Ninth, where it will disband.

During the parade and throughout the evening there will be illumination and red fire in front of the theaters, hotels and many business houses.

The final big event of the Victory New Year's Eve celebration comes at 11:45 o'clock at Central Park, where will gather all the bands which had taken part in the parade, more bombs will be exploded and there will be a programme, the details of which are being kept secret. Everyone is invited.

All of the hotels and restaurants report full bookings for New Year's Eve tables and the celebration promises to be the biggest the city has ever seen, albeit it will be a dry one—after 9 o'clock.

GIRL'S STORY BRINGS ARREST OF YOUTH.

IS RELEASED ON BAIL AND WILL BE TRIED TOMORROW ON STATUTORY CHARGE.

William Reynolds, 19, was arrested at No. 475 East Forty-eighth street on a statutory charge by Officers Mack and Burger of the police juvenile bureau yesterday and arraigned before Justice Brown. He pleaded not guilty, and his trial was set for tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. He was released on $500 bail.

The arrest of Reynolds was made as the result of the report of Miss Betty Newcombe, a pretty 18-year-old girl, who was arrested with a companion on a bogus-check charge a few days before Christmas. She told the police she had been married previously to a man, who left her on their wedding night, and that when she met Reynolds they fell in love.

His parents objected, she said, and the mother of Reynolds declared that she was delinquent and had led her son astray. The mother insisted that the girl be sent to the Los Feliz Hospital for treatment, where she was discharged soon after having been admitted. This is borne out by the police records.

At the time of her arrest Miss Newcombe was trying to get together funds so that she could go to another part of the country, start life over again and raise her baby in other surroundings, she said. Nick Harris, who arrested the young woman, talked the matter over with police juvenile authorities, and decided that owing to her condition she was irresponsible, and arranged that the goods obtained by the alleged bogus checks be returned to the firms they were obtained from and the charges dropped. The arrest of Reynolds then followed.

DEMAND RIGHT TO MAKE OWN FUTURE.

JUGO-SLAVS HERE CALL UPON PEACE CONFEREES TO GUARD THEIR POLITICAL FREEDOM.

A mass meeting of Jugo or southern Slavs, representing 10,000 of this race living in Los Angeles and Southern California, held last night at Blanchard Hall, adopted resolutions protesting at any agreement made in Paris, which shall "ignore our national aspirations and deny our peoples the right to determine their own future." Copies of the resolutions were directed to be sent to President Wilson, to members of the American Peace Commission in Paris, and to Dr. Ante Trumbich of the Jugo-Slav National Council at Paris.

The associated governments have already recognized the government of the Czech-Slavs, or the northern Slavic peoples, who threw off the yoke of Austria. The speakers last night told of similar aspirations of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, who have been seeking national freedom since the seventh century. Belief that Italy may be blocking the recognition of the Jugo-Slavs was expressed by the speakers, who included G. Matulich, president of the local Jugo-Slav organization; John R. Layng, George Vranges, Serbian army officer; B. K. Scar, and M. Budincich, president of the local Serbian Association.

CHECK UP SPIRITS.

Police Wire Chicago to Learn if Slashed Throat Halted Christmas Present.

The detective bureau of the Los Angeles police department has many peculiar cases to handle, but seldom is it that the messages of the spirit world are taken so literally that a telegram is sent to other cities to inquire if the message is based on truth. This happened, however, yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Carrie Vaughn, a colored woman of No. 905 Hemlock street, telephoned to Captain of Detectives Home that she wanted the services of "your best detective." Detective Sergeant Jimmie Bean was detailed, and the office's high-powered machine was used to rush him to the Hemlock-street address.

The result of Detective Bean's investigation and report is as follows: "Interviewed Mrs. Vaughn and found she had been consulting a clairvoyant to find out why the usual Christmas present from a daughter in Chicago had not arrived. She claims the clairvoyant brought her daughter from the spirit world and gave a message which stated 'her throat was cut.' Would not be satisfied unless this is verified. Sent following telegram to the Chief of Police in Chicago: 'Have been informed my daughter, Mrs. Crystal Ferse, of No. 3544 Grand boulevard, has been seriously hurt. Please investigate and wire me collect.'"

Up to midnight no report has been received from Chicago.

Steel Freighter Launched.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SEATTLE, Dec. 28.—The 8800-ton steel freighter West Maximus, built by Skinner & Eddy for the United States Emergency Fleet, was launched here today, christened by Mrs. Ole Hanson, wife of Mayor Hanson.

FROM BAY CITY TO VENICE BY AIRPLANE.

AVIATORS SAY AERIAL POSTAL ROUTE ALONG COAST IS PRACTICABLE.

Their coming unheralded, Lieut. S. H. Sharpe, flight commander; Lieut. C. C. Lee, Lieut. K. M. Davis, Capt. F. A. Stockdale, flight surgeon, and Private Y. Thomas, arrived at Venice yesterday afternoon from San Francisco in three government airplanes. The airmen left San Diego last week for the Bay City on an air-mapping expedition, and they are now on their return trip.

They left Fresno at 9:55 o'clock yesterday morning, arriving at Bakersfield at 11:40, where they stopped until 1:10 in the afternoon, alighting at Venice at 2:45.

The trip from the north, said Lieut. Sharpe, was without incident until the planes struck an air pocket while crossing over the Tehachepi range, when all three machines violently nosed down about 400 or 500 feet before they were arighted and under control.

Lieut. Sharpe states that the highest altitude reached on the trip was 8200 feet, and that the average flying altitude was about 6000 feet. The officer says the machines came over without giving any mechanical trouble, and declares that an aerial postal route along the Pacific Coast has been found to be entirely practical.

The start to San Diego will be made about noon today, if favorable weather conditions prevail.

FOR SAWTELLE SEWAGE.

Santa Monica Public Works Commissioner Gets Inquiry from City Engineer.

Commissioner W. H. Carter of the Santa Monica public works department has received a letter from the Los Angeles City Engineer's office asking for information concerning the beach sewer system. Mr. Carter stated yesterday that he understands Los Angeles is trying to find an efficient and economical way to dispose of the sewage of Sawtelle. A system might be constructed to connect with an outfall in the strip of ocean frontage north of the Japanese village, but that would be expensive, he said.

Beach officials say that, if given an opportunity, the uptown engineer's office would doubtless like to connect the Sawtelle pipe line with the big main that runs through Colorado avenue and thence to the ocean. The beach sewer system, however, is no larger than is needed there, it is stated, and that the Sawtelle sewage would tend to destroy the bathing beach in the vicinity of the municipal pier.

MANY KILLED AIDING THE LOST BATTALION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Among officers arriving today on the transport Turrialba was Capt. William Harrigan, son of the late Edward Harrigan, comedian. Capt. Harrigan was wounded by a machine-gun bullet while leading a detachment which went to the rescue of Col. Whittlesey's "lost battalion."

Capt. Harrigan said that when carrier pigeons released by Col. Whittlesey arrived with requests for aid, a heavy fog made an advance temporarily impossible.

"We called for forty volunteers to attempt to get food and clothing to the surrounded battalion," he said, "and my battalion volunteered to a man."

Forty men were selected, he said, and started forward, but when the fog lifted and permitted an advance in force all were found slain by machine-gun fire.

Describing the advance of the second relief party, Capt. Harrigan declared their valor "will never be fully understood."

As they advanced to aid Lieut.-Col. Whittlesey's men, he said, many fell from sheer exhaustion, but, believing they had been shot. Despite the rain of machine-gun bullets, which killed many of his command, he said, "they fought like devils, and the Boche was glad to give up ground in the face of such an irresistible and irrepressible force."

TO KEEP GAS ON HAND UNTIL PEACE SIGNED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The future of the chemical warfare branch of the army was discussed today at a conference of Senate Military Committee members with officials of the War Department. All of the gas on hand which was manufactured for use against the enemy, the Senators were told, will be kept with precautions against explosions until the actual peace treaty is signed.

It is possible, the Senators were advised, that the peace treaty will contain specific reference to the use of gas in future wars. If such warfare is prohibited, the War Department's stock, amounting to 2700 tons, will be destroyed. If not, a small supply will be retained and the rest taken to sea and destroyed except a small part which may be salvaged for commercial purposes.

FEWER DEATHS IN INDUSTRIES.

This is Shown by a Report Made to Governor.

Accident Commission Submits Interesting Figures.

Uses Lectures and Pictures to Teach Safety.

The report of the Industrial Accident Commission of California for the last fiscal year, which has just been placed in the hands of the Governor, shows that there were thirty-one fewer industrial deaths than during the previous fiscal year, the total being 626, in spite of the larger number of employees and the impetus given to hazardous employment as a result of war activities.

The total number of reported industrial injuries was 109,988. Dependents to the number of 668 were left as the result of 284 fatalities, and 170 partial dependents were left in seventy-five fatal cases. Life pensions were awarded in eight cases of serious and permanent injury.

The injured workers were awarded $2,769,997 in compensation, and the compensation and medical costs totalled $3,948,354.

There were 1543 contested cases decided, and compensation was awarded to employees in 69.2 per cent. of the contested cases, and denied in 21.4 per cent. of the cases decided.

NEED RE-EDUCATION.

The average age of the persons killed was 38 years, and the average wage was $22.26 a week. Occupational diseases reported numbered 506. During the year 1947 permanent injury cases were reported and referred to the permanent disability rating department. Investigation shows, says the report, that need of industrial re-education for the permanently crippled is apparent.

During the fiscal year, 1289 inspections were made by the department's engineers and inspectors, in which plants there were 79,117 employees. There were also inspected 1670 elevators, 841 boilers and 362 air tanks. Illustrated "safety first" lectures and motion pictures on preventable accidents were used extensively throughout the State.

Employers have continued to patronize the State compensation fund in increasingly large numbers, says the report, and the fund wrote in 1917 compensation premiums to the amount of $1,373,792.54, or 24.4 per cent. of California's total compensation premium income. It is estimated the fund will have a premium income of $2,500,000 for 1918, representing an increase of about 80 per cent. over the business of 1917.

The fund's total assets as of June 30, 1918, were $2,263,087.85. The expense ratio was reduced from 15.46 per cent. in 1915 to 10.28 per cent. for the first six months of 1918. The sum of $310,205.23 was refunded to policy-holders during the fiscal year.

DR. SMITH REBUKES STIRRERS OF STRIFE.

SAYS THOSE WHO LOVE AMERICA MUST NOT HATE ITS FRIENDS.

Sinn Feiners and others in America who are trying to stir up strife against Great Britain were rebuked, though not by name, last night by the Rev. Merle N. Smith of Pasadena in addressing the Iowa Association of Southern California at Hamburger's cafe. Dr. Smith, who served as a Y.M.C.A. secretary in France, said:

"The time has come to silence those who profess love of America, but who nullify it by hatred of England."

Dr. Smith's statement came after he had told of the sacrifice made by Great Britain as shown by the empire's millions of casualties. "Remember," said Dr. Smith, "that it was the navy of Great Britain which blocked the Kiel Canal and kept Germany at bay until the United States could prepare."

Dr. Smith roused his hearers to great enthusiasm as he told of the comradeship which exists between the United States and the Allies, and how their armies fought side by side that the world might be safe for free peoples.

The dinner last night was one annually held by the association to mark the admission of Iowa to the Union, which was December 28, 1846. The guests of honor were Maj. Harry Wishard and Capt. Frank Nichol, both of the United States Army, who spoke briefly. In addition to Dr. Smith, who delivered the principal address, were Col. David J. Palmer, former Railroad Commissioner and Past State commander of the G.A.R.; Rev. Paul G. Stevens, Charles S. Crail, recently appointed to the Superior bench by Gov. Stephens to succeed another former Iowa man; Judge Finlayson, who moves up to the California Supreme Court; Superior Judge Fred Taft, who asked for all Iowans in Southern California to join the organization, and Judge Frederick W. Houser, president of the association, who presided.

There was an attendance of several hundred, and an excellent musical programme was rendered. Secretary C. H. Parsons announced that plans are being made for a picnic to be held by the association on February 22.

URGES WIDER PHYSICAL EXERCISE IN SCHOOLS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Physical training should be given a prominent place in the country's educational system, because chiefly it is responsible for the health of students, declared Prof. Kilpatrick of Columbia University, in an address here today at the annual convention of the Society of Directors of Physical Education in Colleges. He advocated a broader system of physical exercise, to include not only formal gymnastics, but wider playing of games.

In advocating the extension of athletic contests as part of physical education, Prof. Kilpatrick declared it was this feature of the training of the American and British armies that enabled them to maintain higher morale than the French and Italian armies.

ALLIES AGREED, SAYS PRESIDENT POINCARE.

SUCCESSFUL CONCLUSION OF PEACE CONFERENCE LABORS IS PREDICTED.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Dec. 27.—The Chronicle's Paris correspondent had an interview with Poincare in the course of which the President said:

"We are beginning as you know important peace deliberations. I am anticipating a successful conclusion of these labors. Our two nations are agreed on the main lines of the fourteen points. We have desired merely not to bind our hands in respect to freedom of the seas. I am confident that Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau, who know and like each other and have worked so closely together, will reach a perfect understanding on all the essentials."

Referring to the devastation the Germans wrought in France the President said:

"The Germans have not only destroyed on a grand scale, but have wrecked our machinery; for instance, they have taken away the essential parts of machines so that they cannot be used. It is all a part of the plan to cripple French industry. They must pay," he declared solemnly, "not only in money, but in kind. That principle of reparation has been recognized by Mr. Lloyd George. Ootherwise, if they can escape by mere money payments they will inflict new damage upon us by our own machines while we are procuring new ones." The correspondent ventured to ask M. Poincare whether he feared Bolshevism. "Not for France," he answered smilingly. "Bolshevism is a microbe, which attacks defeated countries, not victorious ones."

FEDERATION LEADERS OPPOSE LABOR PARTY.

COUNCIL VOTES TO SEND DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE AT VERSAILLES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor at a special session here today, rejected a proposal calling for formation of a national political labor party, but voted to send delegates to the International Labor Conference at Versailles next month.

Samuel Gompers, president of the federation, in a formal announcement, said the council considered it is not the province of the central bodies and State federations to form or become part of a national labor party as the best interest of labor would be served by "the more thorough organization of the workers, skilled and unskilled, in trades-union movements." He added there was no objection to central or State organizations entering the political field "either independently or otherwise."

Gompers announced the selection of himself and the following as delegates to the International Labor Conference: James Duncan, president of the Granite Cutters' International Association of America; John R. Alpine, president of the United Association of Plumbers and Fitters; Frank Duffy, secretary of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, and William Green, secretary and treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America.

HUN DEBT ESTIMATED.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, Dec. 28.—(Havas.) The Chamber of Deputies today discussed the provisional credits for the first quarter of 1919. During the course of the discussion, Deputy Jacques Stern declared war expenses of France would total 250,000,000,000 francs, those of Great Britain he estimated at 200,000,000,000 and of Belgium at 20,000,000,000. Thus, he said, the Allies could ask from Germany 470,000,000,000 francs.

M. Stern recalled that Dr. Karl Helfferich, an authority on German financial matters, in 1913, estimated the annual income of Germany at 50,000,000,000 marks. To divide equitably among the Allies the war expenses, M. Stern considered necessary creation of a financial inter-Allied commission, which would proportion the debt among the nations. This commission, he believed, could constitute the juridical basis of a league of nations. The adhesion of Russia could be obtained, according to M. Stern, by calling on the sane part of the nation.

The discussion will be resumed tomorrow.

INFLUENZA DECLINES IN MILITARY CAMPS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Influenza is again definitely on the decline in army camps. A detailed report of health conditions of troops in the United States issued today by the Surgeon-General's office did not show a single case in several of the larger camps for the week ended December 20.

RED CONVICT IN BERGER'S TRIAL.

Prof. Haessler Denies Being Influenced by Editor.

Declares Milwaukee Socialist Too Slow a Bird.

Praises the Bolshevist Government in Russia.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—Prof. Carl Haessler, formerly an instructor at the University of Illinois and later employed as a writer on the Milwaukee Leader, was brought from the United States Army disciplinary barracks at Leavenworth, Kan., where he is serving a twelve-year term for refusing to wear a soldier's uniform, to testify today in the trial of the five Socialist leaders charged with violation of the espionage law. Haessler refused to testify under oath, but affirmed his evidence was true.

He was called to testify that Victor L. Berger of Milwaukee, editor of the leader, had not influenced him in any way in his determination to refuse to accept military duty, but before he was through he told the story of his life, expressed his radical views on political economy and war and reviewed his trial by court-martial for wilful disobedience of military orders last summer.

Haessler said he was dismissed as a teacher at the University of Illinois because of his refusal to perform military duty.

Denying he had been induced by Berger to become a soldier, the witness said:

TOO SLOW A BIRD.

"Berger is too slow a bird, he is not fast enough to travel in my company politically or economically.

"He was always advising me to be more temperate in my talk and writings," said Haessler. The witness said Berger refused to print several of his articles because they were too radical.

Haessler described himself as an "anti-imperialist" and Socialist. He said he was graduated from the University of Wisconsin and then won a Cecil Rhodes scholarship at Oxford University, England. He said half of the professors at Oxford were Socialists and radicalism was a fad among the faculty.

He said he first became interested in socialism while attending that university and later was greatly influenced by the books of Prof. Dewey of Columbia University.

CARRIES RED FLAG.

Haessler said he had a red flag and two American flags in his home and hoped to see the red flag everywhere some day. He expressed admiration for the Bolshevik government in Russia.

He was preceded on the stand by his wife, who testified to having heard Berger advise him to accept military service.

Sarah Smith, secretary of the Young People's Socialist League's Chicago convention in 1917, testified to the proceedings of that session.

"Did you ever hear of the alleged Socialist motto, 'The hand that holds a musket shall never hold mine,'" asked William A. Cunnea of counsel for the defense.

"I never heard of it," quickly answered the witness. "I know my sweetheart can hold mine."

"Where is he?"

"With the United States Army in France."

Rev. Irvin St. John Tucker, fourth of the five defendants to take the witness stand, began his testimony shortly before the adjournment of court.

OVERSEAS VETERANS RECEIVE DISCHARGES.

ENLISTED MEN OF AVIATION CORPS FREED FROM SERVICE AT CAMP LEWIS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CAMP LEWIS (Tacoma, Wash.) Dec. 28.—The first big lot of overseas veterans was discharged here today, 250 enlisted men of the aviation section of the Signal Corps leaving for their homes. Practically all were from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. Seventy-eight officers from various units were discharged today.

Discharges are about keeping even pace with arrivals of men sent here for discharge. The newcomers are from the States which sent men here, California, Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado. The men from these States named are being sent to camps nearer home for demobilization.

California men in units belonging to this camp are being sent in small numbers to the Presidio, San Francisco, and Camp Kearny, Cal., for discharge. They leave when four or more men from California have been found entitled to discharge.

There were three deaths from pneumonia and one from epilepsy among the 31,934 in camp during the week just past, according to the weekly health report issued today. There were 129 new cases of pneumonia, 29 cases of influenza, 52 of mumps, 6 cases of measles and 4 of scarlet fever. Mumps and pneumonia showed a sharp increase over the preceding week when 22 and 109 cases, respectively, were reported. The death rate from penumonia is so low, however, that medical officers express surprise.

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP OF LAND FORBIDDEN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 28.—Suggested principles for incorporation in the proposed Jewish commonwealth in Palestine were agreed upon today at the national convention of Poale Zionists. It was agreed that the private ownership of land should be forbidden and that land should be the property of the State and community. Workers would rent it for a term of years. A minimum wage for workers is asked of the founders of the new state. Wages, it is suggested, should be a matter of state concern and not of individual control.

Colonization on the co-operative plan, by which the poorest worker could start with some of the advantages of the richer, is asked.

SOUTHLAND MEN IN CASUALTIES.

SANTA BARBARA, Dec. 28.—Wesley M. Houx, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Houx, of Goleta, died at Vladivostock, December 22, according to an official telegram received from Washington today. He was taken down with meningitis. The deceased was 21, having enlisted when but 19, in July of 1917, and went to Siberia in September. He was a local High School boy and before this country went into the war was a member of the High School cadets, taking a great interest in military tactics.

POMONA, Dec. 28.—Mrs. Mary Goodell, of this city, received word today that her son, Clarence Goodell, had died of wounds in a French hospital. He was wounded on October 25. On Christmas Day the mother received the first message that her boy had been wounded. The telegram came from the office of the Adjutant-General and stated that the soldier boy was only slightly hurt. Another brother, Ralph Goodell, is also in France. Alvin Goodell and Murray Goodell, two other brothers reside here in Pomona.

Clarence was one of the first to enlist and joined Co. B, while the company was at Camp Kearny. He left with a small group of men for overseas duty and was a member of the One Hundred and Fourth Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. He is the seventeenth Pomona boy to pay the supreme sacrifice.

WILSON TO RETURN HOME IN FEBRUARY.

PRESIDENT EXPECTS TO LEAVE PARIS POSSIBILY BEFORE PEACE CONGRESS OPENS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—It is the expectation in official circles here that President Wilson will return to America by the middle of February at the latest. Whether the formal peace congress will have opened by that time is not known, although there is ground to believe that the plenipotentiaries will not have completed by the end of January the necessary preliminaries, and that it might be the latter part of February after the President's return to this country, that the sessions will begin.

Up to the present time barely more than the surface of the prepeace congress questions have been touched. The problems are so tremendous and various that an authority declared today far more time must be consumed in the initial treatment of them than the public could imagine.

It was also intimated that up to the present date, President Wilson has not exposed his hand in regard to the settlement of territorial issues between the powers, including those between Italy and the Jugo-Slavs. He is thought to be awaiting the line-up of the several attorneys on the fundamental matters such as the league of nations and the question of free seas, before making known his position on the problems which to his mind are secondary.

It is assumed here that before the President returns to this country he will have had the positive assurance that he desires from the heads of the Allied governments regarding the league of nations especially. It is thought that with such assurances it will not be necessary for him to return soon to Paris unless there should develop unforeseen difficulties, which would make advisable his personal presence at the congress.

It is considered certain, however, that President Wilson will attend the final sessions of the congress, and it is thought to be his hope that the preliminary discussions between himself and the heads of the Allied governments will not only facilitate the work of the congress proper, but will also make it possible for the congress to complete its work in a much more expeditious and speedy manner than has been deemed likely.

SUPREME COURT GETS DEBS SEDITION BRIEF.

COUNCEL CLAIMS GOVERNMENT HAS NO WAR POWER TO REGULATE SPEECH.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The right of the government in exercising war powers to regulate public discussion and freedom of speech was denied by counsel for Eugene V. Debs in a brief filed today with the Supreme Court, asking reversal of judgments sentencing Debs to ten years' imprisonment because of statements made in a speech in Canton, Ohio, on June 16, last.

Declaring Debs's conviction "rests squarely upon his 'seditious temper,'" the brief arraigns the courts of the country for their attitude toward the Espionage Act.

"Practically all of the cases since the adoption of the Espionage Act, in dealing with the right of free speech," said the brief, "while giving some measure of verbal recognition to that right, have abruptly swept aside any consideration of such a right in conflict with the general war purposes of the government.

"The inference of these decisions and the obvious theory of the amendments to the Espionage Act added in May, 1918, is that public discussions can be constitutionally controlled as an incident of the war power.

"We earnestly submit that such interpretation of the right of free speech is a careless sweeping aside of the most vital principle of American freedom, not only without affirmative constitutional warrant, but in the face of the direct prohibition of the first constitutional amendment."

BAKER WARNS OF WAR BANKRUPTS

Secretary Asks Congress to Legalize Contracts.

Prompt Action Necessary to Avert Financial Chaos.

Special Rule in House will Hurry Action on Bill.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Importance of prompt action to avert serious financial distress on the part of the industrial interests of the nation threatened by the muddle over war contracts was impressed upon the Rules Committee of the House today by Secretary of War Baker, Assistant Secretary Crowell and E. R. Stettinius, who represented the War Department in munitions contracts abroad.

Following their appearance the committee voted to recommend a rule to the House for consideration of the Dent bill on next Thursday ahead of other business. This is the bill reported favorably by the House Military Affairs Committee authorizing the War Department to make settlements on contracts held invalid by the Controller of the Treasury because of an informal or verbal nature and now terminated by the close of the war.

Efforts were made to pass the bill before the holiday recess of Congress, but opposition appeared which delayed action and made it necessary to resort to a special rule to head off further obstructions.

"We got into this trouble in a desire to cut red tape," said Secretary Baker before the Rules Committee. "The department would agree with a manufacturer and tell him to go to work and afterward would draw up a formal contract. We cannot settle on these contracts without this legislation. I question the Controller's ruling, but nevertheless he made it.

PERSHING ASKS ACTION.

"Gen. Pershing has cabled that this legislation is very necessary so far as contracts made abroad are concerned. In letting contracts in England this country has dealt through the British government, which distributed orders among government-controlled and private factories.

"These contracts with the British government of necessity had to be informal because to make them formal would have required a treaty for which there was not time. The same condition applied to France. In Switzerland, Italy and Spain contracts were placed on a purely business basis.

"The United States cannot be forced to pay anything on these contracts, but I believe it should pay not one dollar less than is just and equitable."

Mr. Crowell told of possible consequences to the business interests of the country of delay.

"Settlement of these contracts is very important to the manufacturing concerns of this country," said Mr. Crowell. "There is over $1,600,000,000 of working capital tied up in these contracts. It is important to get these plants back to private business as quickly as possible in order to take up the labor surplus. I believe these adjustments will tend to stabilize the transition from a war to a peace basis.

FACING BANKRUPTCY.

"The department has received numerous telegrams from manufacturers urging speedy action, some of them saying they would face bankruptcy in a week, and others saying this danger was only two weeks off."

Mr. Stettinius said that 90 per cent. of the purchases in England were made through the British government, and that British concerns are making a larger profit than those of France because of the British system of allowing a certain specified profit. The contracts in France, he said, totaled about $400,000,000. He said tens of millions of dollars would be saved by terminating contracts abroad without completing them.

Representative Sherley, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, urged speedy action on the ground that delay hampered his committee in determining how much money can be saved by the termination of war contracts.

Considerable discussion is certain to take place when the bill comes up on the floor of the House, various amendments being proposed. Representative Madden of Chicago insists that the adjustment of contracts should be placed in the hands of the Department of Justice instead of the War Department. Others have different proposals.

CONTRACTORS CLAMOR.

Meanwhile a clamor is being heard from contractors and subcontractors all over the country.

The government dealt confidentially with large contractors, who sublet much of the work. The large contractors have refused to settle with the subcontractors pending an adjustment with the War Department.

A meeting of contractors and subcontractors from various sections has been called to be held in Cleveland January 3. At this meeting, besides taking steps to speed up the pending legislation, an effort will be made to expedite the checking over of claims by government accounts.

The War Department estimates that there is a total of $1,675,000,000 involved in 6600 contracts, which were verbal and informal. This, however, does not begin to represent the number of concerns actually involved and left in a state of business uncertainty by existing conditions because there were many hundreds of subcontractors who do not appear in the list of main contractors.

Because they've grown to be one of the institutions of Southern California—watched for, read and acted upon by rich and poor, citizen and tourist, business man and private individual!—TIMES' Want-Ads have a distinct and tremendous value over and above the overwhelming circulation which carries them into 136,900 households.

It is recognized and conceded throughout the United States that Want-Ads in the LOS ANGELES TIMES represent the biggest advertising bargain in America.

Average Sunday circulation of THE TIMES for November reached the enormous figure of 136,900.

Each copy of THE TIMES that went forth contained 7000 individual Want-Ads.

A single Sunday's issue of THE TIMES spread abroad over the land a total of nearly a billion Want-Ads—7000 Want-Ads in each of the 136,900 copies of the Sunday TIMES.

And others, o'erspreading the land, reach populous cities, alighting as the dawn at cottage gate or porch of millionaire.

A night's phenomenon!

Behold! Nine hundred million salesmen have arrived in the Salesmen!—Times Want Ads!

And is there a thing more marvelous?

Yes.

One hundred and thirty-six thousand of these salesmen are pu work for fifty cents.

Washington Chiefs Admit Dumping Mail Here; Surprised at Kicks.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Postoffice officials say there has been no mistake in routing mail and Christmas packages to California and that they have no reports of congestion in the West any greater than usual at this time of the year. The superintendent of railway mail service admitted today that Los Angeles might have been somewhat piled up with parcel post, but said the plan followed this year had been effective for some time.

Los Angeles, as the terminal for all of Southern California parcel post and package mail, and Sacramento, as the terminal of all Northern California parcel post, get all eastern package mail unsorted direct from the East in through baggage or mail storage cars. No attempt is made to route or arrange this package mail on its way across the country and it is dumped at the terminals for distribution and routing.

From Los Angeles all such mail destined to points south of the Tehachapi is dispatched and assorted there and on the short trips from Los Angeles to the final destination. The same practice is true at Sacramento.

No one at the Postoffice Department would say whether this plan was in effect at this time last year, but said: "For some time it has been satisfactory."

This arrangement is worked out to save money as all through package mail under this plan goes through as dead mail in storage without any clerks on the cars to sort, route or otherwise segregate and arrange it for quick distribution on its arrival on the Coast.

Some delay might be occasioned by this plan, is the only admission secured from the postoffice officials, who seem to think whatever cause for criticism there might be is due entirely to local failure to speed up the work and put enough help on to avoid unusual delay and confusion by neglect to keep the terminal clear so that all new package mail from the East could go through without delay.

All postoffice officials say they are not in any way to blame for delay of soldiers' mail from the other side or from the camps in this country, nor are they responsible for delay and faulty delivery of soldiers' mail from families and friends. All this is in the sole control of the military authorities and the responsibility is not divided, they say.

Investigation of the shortcomings of the military include this very point and the Senate committee on military plans to ventilate this whole subject as soon as it can get under way soon after the holidays are over. Complaints from Maine to California and from Canada to Mexico have failed to secure any improvement in the service.

Last night saw the disposal at the Los Angeles postoffice of the last large shipment of holiday mail from the East. Some more will filter across the continent during the present week, but the great bulk of the parcel post shipments have been handled. Several hundred extra employees, used in the distribution and delivery of this mail, were dismissed last night, and the record for the holiday season of 1918 virtually closed.

It has been a strenuous time for the Los Angeles office, due to the fact that for the first time, local officials say, thousands of sacks of mail were dumped here for distribution all over California; but the task has been accomplished with a minimum of friction, and the record made by Postmaster Brown and his force of workers is commendable in every way.

The record of thefts by extra employees, too, has been kept down, and this year only one arrest was made, that of David Rossen, driver of an automobile delivery wagon, who was arraigned before United States Commissioner Long, yesterday. He will have his preliminary examination tomorow morning. Meanwhile he is in the County Jail, unable to furnish a bond for $500.

Often there have been several arrests of this character, where men have sought to secure valuable holiday gifts. It is believed that the stealings of Rossen amount to considerable, but the specific charge against him is that he stole a watch and knife that had been used as a decoy by Postoffice Inspector Walter Cookson. Rossen was under suspicion for several days before being taken into custody.

WILL RETURN TO FRANCE.

Arthur A. Dietz, for the past five years director of the Slauson Playground, will leave this morning for New York, where he will sail for France to resume his work as recreational director for the Y.M.C.A. He returned from overseas last August, after having been gassed on the west front. Since returning home he has spoken in various high schools and churches and before several clubs regarding the work overseas.

WILL CUT FORCE OF OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

CHANGES SCHEDULED FOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S STAFF.

Lyndol L. Young, fourth assistant to United States District Attorney O'Connor, will retire from the office with the beginning of the new year, it is announced, although his resignation has not yet gone on to Washington. Mr. Young admits, however, that he will early withdraw from the public service.

Lyle W. Rucker, who for some time has been qualifying for the United States aviation service, but who was recently discharged at Seattle, will also leave the force of the United States District Attorney. It is understood that there will be another resignation soon.

The office force now consists of J. Robert O'Connor, United States District Attorney; Clyde L. Moody, first assistant; Gordon Lawson, second assistant; L. L. Young, third assistant, and Thomas L. Green, fourth assistant, and he ranks with First Assistant Moody as to salary. Milton Bryan has a clerical job, and there are three women stenographers.

On account of the close of the war, and the abrogation of many of the regulations relating to that condition, there are likely to be other changes in the office. The same condition will apply to several of the other offices whose force has been recently augmented on account of the war.

TELL POINTS IN POISON THEORY.

District Attorney is Firm in Stand Against Coroner.

Explain How Cyanide in Body may Cause Convulsions.

Defense Counsel is Confident Client will be Freed.

The extraordinary phases of the Gibbons cyanide-poisoning puzzle continued to develop yesterday along legal and scientific lines, with the unique result that the principal figure in the whole situation, Mrs. Gertrude Myron Gibbons, charged with the murder of her husband, Frank C. Gibbons, has become an issue of almost secondary importance, in view of the impending battle of authorities and experts opposing one another in the case.

Although, officially, peace reigns between the office of the District Attorney and the Coroner, the diametrically-opposed action of the officials of these two county departments has become marked. No statements were forthcoming, however, from either Dist.-Atty. Woolwine or Coroner Hartwell yesterday. Mr. Woolwine is firm for prosecution on the charge of murder, by cyanide poisoning; the Coroner's opinion has been expressed by signing the certificate of natural death.

Attorney Harrison Cassell, for the defense, is kept busy trying to catch up with the rapidly-shifting claims, tests, results and controversies that so far have marked the unraveling of the case in which he is to appear and to defend a woman on a charge which, as yet, has not fully matured.

PROMISE OF CONFLICT.

But while yesterday was marked by the absence of any sudden reversals of action or opinion, it was rich in the promise of the conflict that is to come when the prosecution and the defense arrive at the point when the distinction between toxicology and chemistry is made at the preliminary hearing on January 2.

The District Attorney's side yesterday set forth points in defense of its position, and as an explanation of the pulmonary hemorrhage which appears to have been the immediate cause of Gibbons's death. First, it was pointed out, convulsions are always present in cases of cyanide poisoning; second, that in cases of cyanide poisoning blood pressure always rises to a marked degree; cyanide poisoning is accompanied by a marked pulmonary congestion, with the result of hemorrhage.

In further explanation it was stated that blood pressure increases through constriction of arteries; that cyanide produces death by action of the drug, carried in the blood, upon the respiratory centers of the brain. Under these conditions, it was explained, the heart keeps on beating for some time, respiration stops by paralysis of respiratory centers of the lungs thus become congest hemorrhage, in cases wh lungs have been weakened culosis, nearly always follo

LACK OF EROSION

As to the lack of erosi stomach, and other point out by the Coroner's offi conditions would not necess low in cases where the cyanide taken is not much of the amount needed death, it was stated.

It was argued by the def Mr. Woolwine's position th orrhage may have been though it was preceded seconds by the death by paralysis, and that the che pharmacist experts may hav to find signs of cyanide tain tests were not used i the examination.

built. The supply of houses is still short for that matter, but many are now going ahead with new buildings of their own and considerable activity in residence construction is bound to be one of the features of the development situation in the early part of the coming year.

Home Industries First.

A formal request designed to encourage the use of local materials in the construction of postoffices and other Federal buildings to be erected hereafter in California was transmitted yesterday by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to California representatives in the national Congress. The action was prompted by surveys recently made indicating the rapid development of the building material industry in this State. Sandstone, granite and marble equal to similar products obtained in the East are available in California and the chamber asks that an effort be made to induce the government officials in charge of Federal building operations to use these local materials on work in this State.

The chamber is backed up in its position by architects and contractors who have made the most careful study of building materials from different sections of the country and the movement is bound to be indorsed by thoughtful persons generally in this State. The government itself could undoubtedly save money on its projects in California if it were to investigate the possibilities of the local sources of building material supplies. There does not seem to be any good reason why trainloads of stone should be hauled clear across the continent to build California buildings, yet this very thing has been done right along in the past. The chamber, as usual, is on the right track and it is to be hoped that the State's representatives in Washington will do their part to bring about the conditions desired.

WEST SIDE SALES.

Ralph O. Williams, manager of the house and lot department of the J. B. Althouse Company, reports the following sales: Ben S. Gubser to R. H. Olden, seven-room colonial bungalow at No. 475 North Oxford avenue, $5400 cash; J. M. Weatherford to H. G. Newcraft, No. 2307 West Twelfth street, eight-room dwelling, $7000; Harry H. Belden to H. The new owner, who owns the adjoining twenty-acre grove, will begin planting shortly. The same broker reports the sale of a lot on Garfield avenue, Ramona Park, for Otto Arnold to J. C. Meyers, for $1800. The purchaser will build an eight-room residence on the site.

BUILDING PICKS UP.

Removal of War Restrictions Releases Many Projects—Activity Predicted for Year Ahead.

Considerable local building activity was revealed in the number of building permits issued in December by the city building department, although the total fell far below the pre-war activity which put Los Angeles in the front rank among the cities of the country. The war restrictions resulted in an almost complete curtailment of building of all classes, during a considerable part of 1918, but now that these restrictions have been removed, Chief Inspector Backus expects a revival of building interests early in the new year, beginning he says, about March 1.

A greater portion of the 535 building permits issued in December covered smaller structures. The total valuation exceeded $600,000. During the year 6350 building permits were issued, their total value being $8,700,000.

The building at No. 513 West Seventh street will be occupied by the Globe Dairy Lunch upon the completion of improvements now under way.

ACQUIRE WAREHOUSE.

Local Book Dealers Secure Storage Space on Alameda Street; Open Northern Branch.

The Potter Brothers Company, wholesale book dealers, with a store at No. 739 South Broadway, have purchased a large warehouse building at No. 1061 Alameda street, which will be renovated to meet the requirements of their growing business. The consideration, according to Richard L. Crescy, who represented both the property owner and the purchasers, was $75,000.

The building has three floors, all of which will be occupied by Potter Bros. This company, which established in Los Angeles a little more than a year ago, has recently purchased the book business of the H. S. Crocker Company of San Francisco, and this will be run in connection with the local business.

The contract price is $29,500. The building will be 127x120 feet, and will have a heavy concrete foundation.

BUYS FINE GROVE.

W. P. Chappell reports the sale of the forty-three-acre orange and walnut grove in the Rivera district known as the McArthur ranch to A. Bardino, formerly of New Mexico. The reported consideration was $40,000.

NEW HOMES TO RISE.

Bungalow Building Shows Builders are Eager to Meet the Demand for Dwellings.

Considerable home-building activity marked the closing week of the year, due largely to the removal of the war-time restrictions on new buildings. Indications are that builders who make a specialty of bungalows will be busy from now on attempting to catch up with the demand for new homes, and that the next few months will see a decided revival in this class of building.

Permits were issued during the past week by the city building department for the following structures: To George Taylor for a two-story frame residence at No. 8533 South Gramercy place, $4500; to Ralph L. Wilcox for an eight-room bungalow at No. 1111 South Manhattan place, $3000; to Puston S. Wright for a five-room bungalow at No. 3779 Wisconsin street, $3150; to Mrs. Grace Lebo for a seven-room residence on Third avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets, $3750; to Messrs. Barnes & Dimmick for three six-room bungalows on Hobart boulevard, near Vernon avenue, total cost $7500; to Guy V. Colf for six colonial bungalows, two on Lexington avenue, near Wilton place, and four on Hobart boulevard, near Vernon avenue, each to cost $2500.

MAUSOLEUM CONTRACT.

A mausoleum to cost $200,000 will shortly be erected in Rosedale Cemetery on West Washington street and La Salle avenue from plans prepared by Lyman Farwell. The structure will be 308 feet long by ninety-one feet wide and will be of reinforced concrete, with granite facings, marble pilasters, art metal skylights and ornamental iron fencing. It will contain 1720 crepts, a chapel, private vaults and rest rooms.

GRAND-AVENUE SALE.

Harry Gray of Pasadena reports the sale to a local investor of an unimproved lot on the east side of Grand avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets, for a consideration understood to have been $1500 a front foot. The lot has a frontage of sixty feet on Grand avenue and a depth of 160 feet. Wright-Callender-Andrews Company, represented by Glenn Duell, acted for the seller.

ORANGE COVE SALES.

M. S. Robertson reports the following sales for the Orange Cove Land Company: To Walter Jaynes, twenty acres, $3500; Erle Owen, twenty acres, $3500; C. A. Reed, ten acres, $1750; Robert Buckles, two lots in Orange Cove, $1500.

BIG CITRUS DEALS.

Large Groves in Covina Valley Purchased by Investors—Resale Made of One Parcel.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

COVINA, Dec. 28.—The largest sale of citrus lands of recent date in the Covina Valley, is one announced this week, whereby H. V. Pright and Henry Damerel of Covina acquired sixty-one acres on Sunflower and Covina avenues, southwest of Charter Oak, the sellers being V. P. English, cashier of the Covina National Bank, and H. A. Kufus of Pomona.

The property is highly improved, being planted about equally to eight-year-old naval and Valencia oranges and lemons. It was purchased about ten years ago by Mr. English, who has been responsible for the improvement of the large tract, the development of which has been watched closely by citrus growers. The land is under the San Dimas irrigating system. The sale was made through S. Douglas of Covina and the consideration was given at $75,000 cash.

Following the sale, Mr. Pright and Mr. Damerel sold to George Fuhr of Azusa, the twenty-six acres of the tract, south of the Pacific Electric main line, which runs through the property.

Mr. Bright and Mr. Damerel have also acquired a twenty-one-acre Valencia grove adjoining their new purchase, formerly the property of James J. Taylor of Kansas City. The consideration paid for this grove, [illegible] the fruit on the trees is understood to have been $42,500.

NEW INDUSTRIES.

Modern Factory Group for Iron Works—Milling Company Plans Oxygen Plant.

A group of modern factory buildings will shortly be constructed for the Keystone Iron Works on Santa Fe avenue south of Thirtieth street from plans prepared by Albert C. Martin. The buildings will include an office structure, machine shop, warehouse, foundry and pattern shop, and will cost, according to the architect's estimates, more than $100,000. The construction will be reinforced concrete.

Another industrial improvement of importance will be the two buildings for a hydrogen and oxygen plant for the Globe Grain and Milling Company at Fifty-first street and Santa Fe avenue. Leonardt & Peck have been awarded the contract. It is estimated that the two buildings, the construction of which will be reinforced concrete, will cost $25,000.

NEW FACTORY FOR VERNON.

Modern Plant Completed in Industrial Suburb.

Will House Manufacturers of Oil Well Tools.

"Sawtooth" Construction Used for Buildings.

Another indication of the rapid expansion of Los Angeles' growing industrial field is revealed in the completion last week of a group of modern factory buildings for the Wilson & Willard Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of oil well tools and supplies, in the Vernon section. The buildings, construction on which began last August, occupy a site of three and a half acres fronting on Vernon avenue just west of Santa Fe avenue, and the total cost of the project, including buildings, ground and equipment, is understood to be over $100,000.

This new plant, which was constructed to meet the demand on the Wilson & Willard Co. for larger and more modern quarters, was built from designs prepared by the architectural firm of Krempel & Erkes, under whose supervision the entire work was done. Six buildings are included in the group, the largest being the machine shop, 90x200 feet, with a floor space of more than 17,000 square feet. Arranged in convenient position to the machine shop are the blacksmith shop, pattern shop and warehouse, all of which are constructed of heavy corrugated metal. An extra heavy concrete base has been laid to support each of the big machines included in the shop equipment.

The office building and garage, which front on Vernon avenue, are of brick and reinforced concrete construction, the former structure being two stories, to accommodate the company's general offices and drafting-rooms.

A feature of the new plant which the architects regard as especially noteworthy is the so-called "sawtooth" construction of the factory buildings. This type of construction has been the subject of considerable study and investigation on the part of construction engineers in the past few years, and is now generally admitted to have certain advantages over ordinary flat or incline-roof factory construction, because, with the "sawtooth" arrangement, a maximum of light enters the building at all hours of the day. In addition to the advantage of diffusing the light, it is also considered by building authorities as permitting of a better interior arrangement.

The Wilson & Willard Co. has already begun the task of moving its equipment into the new plant, and will be in complete possession by January 10.

A
ADVERTISED:
"AM I CRAZY?"

He offered 10 acres of [illegible] land to every family that would come onto his plantation and improve, while he retained intervening plots.

How would you like to come onto some of these city lot subdivisions right here in Los Angeles, with street work all in and paid for; and thereby gain advantage of the law that population creates land values, through our long-tested plan?

We can gain great advantages for you in this line. Over 600 families have already enrolled in our Garden-Home-securing Club and most of them have already become happy and satisfied owners of big garden lots in hitherto unoccupied subdivisions which we are able to distribute for banks, mortgage companies and crippled realty syndicates on mortgage value basis, and less than rent terms in order to restore and enhance values for them in their "dead-locked and unoccupied" subdivision.

We have city lots, also charming foothill and valley acres and the greatest and grandest offerings yet to be made.

Come to this office at once and get full particulars.

MINES—

And Mining.

MINING MEN, DO YOU KNOW? OF COURSE you don't, just because some one has been unfriendly enough to say you have the ore, when, if you stop to think, you know he knows no more about it than you do. If you use the "Core Drill," which you can buy yourself, "you" will then "know," no guess work. Our machines have a 15 h.p. boist, which you can use to mine with; also a triplex pressure pump and 500 ft. discharge pipe to unwater your shaft, and nearly every part, including a fine wagon gear, can be used on mine when through drilling. This investment is not a waste of money, but the best you ever made; if you should not strike ore in the first hole, with the large cores laid on your desk, it doesn't take the time and persuasion to interest capital. Write for circular, or come and see us and see the cores we have here from all over.

WEEKLY CITRUS REPORT.

[OFFICE OF THE FRUIT WORLD.]

The holiday season on California oranges for 1918 is now one of the bright pages in the industry's history.

It was brisk and satisfactory.

Consumers had experienced a long closed season on the old seedless navel orange (the crop of which last year was nearly a complete failure) and they welcomed it back to the fruit stands in a manner that leaves no question as to its popularity.

Regulation of maturity conditions prior to shipping has again prevented the slugging of markets with immature green navels and as a consequence the Christmas holiday passed with the trade still clamoring for more navels.

It is one of the strongest "after-the-holiday" situations that California has experienced in many years. The tracks are cleaned up.

The Central California navels, which comprised the major portion of the holiday offerings, showed many instances of decay arising from sweating and some low averages were sandwiched into the general prosperity. Instances of 3 to 5 per cent. decay were numerous and instances of 50 per cent. decay are on record.

There is room for improvement in packing-house processes.

Average selling of navels in eastern auctions has been around $5 to $6 per box, according to sizes; and those are some prices for an after-war period.

The shipments from Central California officially tally 2643 cars, but they were all overloads as compared with previous years, and in boxes the output is 1,221,068 against 741,048 last year. The average prices ranged this year so this year's gross value of the Central California navel at eastern markets was nearly five million dollars against about two million dollars for last year's output; wherefore the cause of the rejoicing that is manifest along the Sierra foothills.

The few cars of Southern California navels that have been disposed of in the auction markets to date have commanded high average prices and have been well received by the trade. Private sale markets have taken the greater part of the shipments to date. A total of 1186 cars have been shipped to date as against 2065 cars to the same date last season.

F.o.b. quotations range from $3.75 to $4, according to district.

Low temperature in many of the Southern California citrus districts the past week necessitated the lighting of smudge pots and caused some damage in groves so situated that they are always exposed to danger from frost. Generally speaking, damage to oranges so far has been nil.

LEMONS.

There was no change to speak of in the lemon situation.

Pickings in all districts are heavy.

Slight damage to the lemon crop has been caused in several lemon districts by low temperature. Small lemons were nipped and may drop off later on in the season, but will have little effect on the season's crop, which, it is estimated, will be the largest in the history of the industry.

A cargo of 13,000 boxes of foreign lemons arrived in New York this week.

COST BILLION DOLLARS TO FIX WHEAT PRICE.

GOVERNMENT FACES HUGE LOSS ON GUARANTEE TO FARMERS OF COUNTRY.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—In the language of the street, the United States government is "holding the bag"—several bags full of $2.26 wheat—and facing a ticklish international tariff situation, as well as a domestic inflated food price bugaboo, all because certain powers that be in this country went "loco" in fixing wheat prices by legislation just as they flew completely off the handle in purchasing big guns and airplanes.

This is on the authority of a local market operator, who speaks, as he says, for everybody that knows anything about the wheat situation. In brief, here are the cold facts that are congealing the blood of those who know:

The United States government faces a loss of $1,000,000,000 because of its price-fixing.

It must either go back on its word to the farmers, who naturally have planted heavily because of the fixed high price; it must tax the people to pay for the $1,000,000,000 estimated deficit it will suffer as a result of its speculation in the breadstuffs, or it must raise wheat tariffs against Argentina and Canada to prevent those countries from selling their surplus in this country at prices below the government rate.

Canada will have about 150,000,000 bushels next year. Her domestic requirement is about 40,000,000 bushels. In Australia there are now some 400,000,000 bushels of wheat stored because of lack of shipping. Argentina has about 300,000,000 bushels in warehouses for the same reason. The British government has bought the Australian wheat for 95 cents—which she could not get to England—fixed a price of $1.68, buying American wheat at $2.26, which she could import, and selling at $1.68. On July 1 the British fixed price will drop to $1.38.

The winter wheat situation in this country is ideal. Indications point to a 915,000,000-bushel production here for next year, with a possibility of there being 1,200,000,000 bushels. There simply cannot be otherwise than a world surplus of wheat next year. It is not generally known what the India crop is—except that it is promising—and there are bound to be many bushels of the grain in Russia.

Canada and Argentina and Australia are naturally going to seek a market for their grain in this country, competing with the United States government and selling to the millers at lower than the government guaranteed price, as against shipping to England at $1.38 a bushel.

It is possible, wheat operators say, that wheat may drop as much as 75 cents here when government control ceases.

If the United States does maintain its guaranteed price the people are going to make a terrible complaint at the upholding of the bread price; if the government rescinds the legislation its word to the producers will be broken and there will be a tremendous "kick"—and if tariffs are raised to protect the American price Canada, Australia and the Argentine are going at the very least, to have a big argument with this country if they do not take retaliatory measures in tariffs against it.

BOND EXPERT SAYS IT'S TIME TO BUY.

In the opinion of Mr. D. T. Babcock, Los Angeles manager for Blyth, Witter & Co., the next few days will be the best time to buy bonds that the investing public has had for years.

At the moment bonds are on a declining market due to the near approach of the application of the income tax law, and to escape some of its rigors many are disposing of their securities. After the first of the year this condition will cease to exist, and prices are almost certain to advance.

At the present time there are some especially attractive issues available which are likely to be eagerly snapped up before the market resumes its normal aspect.

WEEKLY REPORT OF MEAT CONDITIONS.

Disregarding the usual lack of demand for dressed meats in the week just past, when poultry is mostly used, local slaughterers killed their normal quota. This resulted in an accumulation of supplies, and the development of a weak undertone.

Some lots of good steers and cows that under ordinary conditions would have commanded a premium, were sold at lower prices than they should, considering their cost alive, due to the liberal supply. Ribs and loins only were in active demand, and prices of $26 to $28 respectively for the top indicated a strong market. Rounds were very draggy and sold anywhere from $16 to at top of $20. In most cases tattlers were sold at the prices the purchasers bid for them. In some instances as low as $15 was accepted.

Veal was the only product that held strong throughout the week. Dressed calves of poor quality and heavy weights brought prices usually paid for good handyweights. The price spread was $18 to $22, according to the weight and quality. There were very few good calves in the offerings.

The supply of dressed hogs and cuts from pork was just about equal to the demand and prices ruled steady at the opening figures.

An oversupply of medium and common lambs weakened the entire lamb market. Retailers held off buying their needs, expecting a decline, and this action produced the desired result. Only a few lambs brought the top prices in the daily quotations.

Wethers and ewes of good quality were shown, but the oversupply of them caused a weakened tendency to the market. While the prices did not decline materially the stocks in the various coolers failed to move out.

There are several lots of cows, steers, lambs and mutton that will be carried over. Veal closed out strong and pork steady. The market is far from presenting a healthy appearance.

Although the lamb market is weak throughout the country it is stronger in Los Angeles and San Francisco than in the East. The top price on the Coast for the week was $27. In Boston it was $23 and in New York $24, although a good many California lambs find their way to these markets, via Chicago. The Los Angeles top for mutton on December 27 was $18. In Boston it was $14 and in New York $16, indicating that our producers are not very badly off by comparison. The local top for steers was $20 as against $19.25 in San Francisco and $25 in New York and Boston. On cows the Los Angeles quotation was $18, San Francisco $16, Boston $16.50, New York $20.

COTTON MARKET.

Foreign Buying Adds Strength to Trading After Discounting Early Liquidation.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28. — The disappointingly small volume of exports during the last week, combined with the easier technical position of the market and the appearance of scattered southern hedge selling, led to active realizing or liquidation in the cotton market during today's early trading. The opening was steady at a decline of 7 points to an advance of 15 points, and there was a little trade buying, but the market quickly weakened to 30@40 points.

As soon as the early offerings had been absorbed by covering and trade buying, the market became firm on a broadening demand, a good part of which seemed to come from foreign trade interests, including Japan, Liverpool and the French commission. January sold up to 30.00, or 102 points above the low level of the morning, and the market closed strong at a net advance of 40@67 points.

TWENTY-FOUR TIMES A DIVIDEND PAYER.

The directors of the Owl Drug Company have declared the twenty-fourth semi-annual dividend on all of the outstanding 8 per cent. cumulative preferred stock of the company as of record on December 20. Checks will be mailed to the stockholders on January 1, 1919.

The year just closing has been a very successful one. The company reports an unusually large increase in volume of business over 1917 or any previous year. The management states that the outlook for 1919 is most promising. A continued increase in volume of business and earnings is expected.

During the year the company opened new stores in Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles. This makes a total of twenty-nine stores, twenty-six of which are located on the Pacific Coast.

MORTGAGES OF FIRST CLASS ARE IN DEMAND.

That satisfactory applications for loans on productive real estate are not keeping pace with demands on the part of banking institutions and private investors for mortgages, is evidenced by sales the past week of Guaranteed First Mortgage Certificates by the Mortgage Guarantee Company of this city.

Large purchases have been made by two Southern California banks and a prominent insurance company, in addition to the usual sales to private investors.

There seems to be plenty of money for investment in first-class mortgage investments yielding 5½ to 6 per cent. at this time, a good augur, it is thought, for the next Liberty Bond Drive.

GRAIN MARKET.

Lower Prices for Corn and Oats; Futures Give Way Before Heavy Buying.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—Lower prices for corn and oats futures made early today failed to hold as the selling was largely short stuff and traders covered it toward the last while commission houses who bought on the break were taking profits on the late bulge. Closing trades were at gains of 3⅛ on December corn which sold at the highest of the season and January was up ⅜ cent while the distant futures were ¼ to ½ cent lower. Oats gained ⅜ to ⅝ cent, showing the most strength at the last.

December corn in St. Louis gained 1 cent while other months were ¼ cent higher to ½ cent lower, the latter on May. Kansas City closed unchanged while deferred futures were ¼ cent higher to 1 cent lower. Oats in the southwestern markets were ½ cent lower to ¼ cent higher.

Shorts in December corn are having a hard time covering and while trade was light prices advanced to a new high for the season, selling at $1.61, where it closed, or 13 cents above the inside figure of Monday. Cash houses are the leading longs, having the future bought against shipping sales and as the receipts are very small are ble to get sufficient grain to replace the hedge.

January was under limited pressure and advanced after a fair break and closed firm at $1.43½ after a range of 2¼ cents. The deferred deliveries acted slightly overbought and while they closed on a rally of 1@1¼ cents the finish was lower with February $1.38¼. March $1.36⅝ and May $1.36½.

Oats showed independent action for the first time in over a week, advancing in the face of a decline in the deferred deliveries of corn and closed about the top with december 69⅝ cents, January 69¼. February 69⅝. March 69⅞ and May 70½.

SEEK SLACKER'S PARDON

Effort to be Made to Secure Freedom for Whittier Youth in County Jail.

Another effort is to be made this week to secure the pardon of Edward J. Phelan of Whittier, who was convicted by a jury before United States District Judge Trippet of trying to avoid the Selective Service Act, and was sentenced to the County Jail for twelve months. His sentence, which was affirmed by the United States District Court of Appeal, will not expire until the coming summer.

It is understood that Judge Trippet, who sentenced Phelan, will be asked to recommend the pardon. Phelan's attorney, I. B. Dockweiler, had intended to try to get him out of jail in order to spend Christmas with his mother, Mrs. Mary Phelan, at Whittier, but met with no encouragement from the United States District Attorney and it was abandoned.

PRISONER OWN ESCORT.

Confessed Phoenix Embezzler Due in Arizona City, All Alone, This Morning.

Presenting an unusual case in changing a prisoner from the custody of one Sheriff to another, Arthur N. Bostron, who gave a written confession that he took $5000 of the funds of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company of Phoenix, Ariz., was scheduled to leave yesterday at 2 o'clock on the Santa Fe to give himself up to the Arizona Sheriff. He was released on Friday night by Sheriff Cline and taken to the Santa Fe Station, where he was identified. There he received money and a ticket to Phoenix. He said he would go back to Phoenix, arriving there at 6 o'clock this morning.

He said he anticipated being met at the station and treated with unusual courtesy. Mr. Bostron admitted to Deputy Sheriffs Fox and Nolan that he spent the money on a woman he described as a vampire.

CHRISTMAS TREE IS FROM FRANCE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ORANGE, Dec. 28.—Dedicated to peace, a Christmas tree from France is now growing in the Trinity Episcopal church yard here.

The tree, then a tiny thing, was taken up in France on September 14, 1914, while the Germans were overrunning the country, and sent to America. It was received by Willard Smith on Washington's Birthday, 1915, and thrived on his place at Villa Park.

When the peace Christmas came it was thought fitting to use this link between the sister republics in celebration of their victory over the enemies of peace, and after having been gaily decorated and used in the Christmas service, it was planted in the church yard and stands as an emblem of faith that peace shall hereafter reign.

He generally wears a soft felt hat and dark clothes, officers say, and although using a variety of names on his paper, a favorite name is Mitchel.

BARLEY, OIL AND TAXES.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

Comes now the barley question.

Of what use are great quantities of barley carefully stored away while a ready market is said to await its release?

The answer seems to be in the price. The growers in a measure, but more particularly the middleman, hold the commodity at from $50 to $55 the ton. The brewing companies are still in control of a large part of the available crop, according to statements of would-be feeders, who claim that, in spite of the fact the brewers are not in a position to use the barley in manufacturing their own product, are reluctant to cut the price.

The stock feeders of Los Angeles county would like to feed more barley than they are feeding. It makes fat faster than hay, and a suitable mixture is highly desirable, but they can't feed it at the present price, they say, so they are feeding just as little barley as possible, mostly to sheep. A wide market could probably be developed were the grain made available for hogs and cattle as well.

Much of the alfalfa hay now being fed was secured around $20 a ton, although the top price is now $22. Barley, the feeders say, could be economically fed at $40 the ton, or in many cases even up to $45. This, it is claimed, would net the producer $3 or more on the ton.

California is one of the best barley-producing States in the country and Los Angeles has its share of this production. Because the breweries have gone out of business is no reason for abandoning the industry, for a large and staple market is assured as soon as the price is stabilized. It looks like a good "get-together" proposition.

Raisers of lambs are a little inclined to panic. There is no reason for this. The lamb market is weak simply because too many lambs are being offered. The demand is normal for this season of the year, but for some reason the growers have conceived the idea that they must protect themselves by unloading "all over." Take it easy. Hold back a bit, and the market will right itself. The same advice applies to hogs. In Chicago it was necessary to establish an embargo, which lasted for several days. There were from 40,000 to 50,000 hogs on the "waiting list" from day to day. Pork is not going out of style, but don't crowd. Instead of rushing immature porkers to market, keep them a while longer and change their rating from common to prime.

Cyrus Peirce & Co. have issued the following "investment maxim:" "In times of high-interest rates buy long-time investments; in times of low-interest rates, buy short-time investments." Sounds like good advice.

The lessons of business optimism which have been expounded in this department since long before the armistice was signed were riveted last Thursday when it was announced that the Los Angeles bank clearings for the day were $8,604,774. It is impossible to doubt a record like that. It means, in a nutshell, that the prosperity of which we have been dreaming and talking has really arrived. Bank clearings for the week totalled $30,325,246.29.

The annual report of the Union Oil Company is promised for early in February, and although there is nothing to hang an official prognostication upon, it is not unlikely that it will show a highly-gratifying state of affairs. For the first nine months of the year the profits were $9,700,000, or 30 per cent. on the outstanding capital, and an increase of $650,000 over the corresponding period in 1917. The production for the same period was 6,300,000 barrels, an increase of 850,000 barrels over the first nine months of 1917. With this ratio maintained for the last three months of the year, as it probably has been, there is little for the stockholders to worry about.

With the release of shipping there is likely to be a heavy export movement of oil to the Orient, which has suffered because of the lack of transport during the war. There is a heavy demand for kerosene, and it is probable that because of this the price of the commodity may be somewhat advanced within the next few months.

An oil exchange suggests an old question in a new dress. Whether the chicken or the egg came first has long been a favorite field for debate, but one which seems on all fours with it is whether the ship or the cargo is entitled to precedence. It is as difficult to imagine the one without the other as it is to vision an egg without a chicken, or chicken that had its origin elsewhere than via the egg route.

There was a brisk and well diversified trading on the floor of the local stock exchange yesterday morning. The general tendency was towards firmness, particularly in the oils. A few shares of General Petroleum were traded in at $130. The final bid of the day was a point off from this figure, with $130.50 asked. Associated sold up to $69, a fractional increase over Friday's close, and Union was strong up to $118.75, closing $118 to $118.25. Jade participated in the movement and sold up to 11 1-8 cents, closing 11 to 11¼. United at 25 5-8 maintained the record on the up side of the ledger. Los Angeles Investment was sold at 43 and Southern California Edison, common, at $81.50. On the mining side the same condition of firmness prevailed, United Eastern and Tom Reed selling above the Friday close. There was also a better tone all through the Liberty Bond list, prices ranging uniformly higher than on the preceding day. The top selling price on the various issues were: First 3½ per cents., $98.62½; first convertible 4¼'s, $96.25; second 4's, $92.25; second convertible 4¼'s, $93.75; third 4¼'s, $95.37½; fourth 4¼'s, $94.37½. For the week 141,224 shares were traded in to the value of $327,036.56.

It is almost time to begin figuring income tax, and in a week or two this will become the favorite business indoor sport. Nearly everyone is involved in one way or another with the tax law, and its many ramifications and ambiguities will give rise to a great deal of controversy. The initial proposition, the "Who's Who," in the grand Federal rodeo may be stated as follows:

The present bill provides for a normal tax rate of 12 per cent. on 1918 income. From this, however, may be deducted the normal tax credit, which consists of dividends from domestic corporations; interest received on Liberty Bonds, except the first issue of 3½ per cents.; a personal exemption of $2000 for a married person, living with husband or wife, or for the head of a family; an exemption of $1000 for a single person, or for a married person not living with husband or wife; an additional $200 for every dependent child under 18 years of age, or for any other dependent person mentally or physically incapable of self-support. The first $4000 above the normal tax credit shall be taxed at the rate of 6 per cent.

Income of 1919 and subsequent years is to be subject to a normal tax of 8 per cent. above the credits mentioned, except that the first $4000 is to be taxed at the rate of 4 per cent.

Surtaxes begin at $5000, increasing at the rate of 1 per cent. for each $2000 between $6000 and $100,000. Above $100,000 the rates are increased 4 per cent. for each group up to a net income of $300,000. Incomes between $300,000 and $500,000 are taxed 63 per cent.; between $500,000 and $1,000,000, 64 per cent., and above $1,000,000, 65 per cent.

NEW YORK STOCK MARKET.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Opening with a number of irregular changes in which losses predominated, today's brief but active stock market suddenly reversed its course, closing with a broad demonstration of strength.

Early weakness was caused by reactions of 1 to almost 3 points in Marine preferred, low-grade rails, coppers and a varied group of specialties, the break in shippings being attributed to overnight cables indicating further delay in the consummation of the long-pending deal. Bear pressure was directed also against Sinclair Oil, which was freely offered at an extreme recession of 3 points, followed by a rebound in which this loss was more than retrieved.

It was not until an inquiry set in for high-grade or investment rails that the market caught its upward stride. Transcontinentals rose 1½ to 2½ points, Southern Pacific leading; rangers were featured by Atchison, and coalers by Reading and Norfolk and Western, the latter rising 3½ points.

Steels, coppers, oils and utilities participated in the advance with tobaccos, food shares and a number of the better-known specialties, final quotations in general being at the day's highest levels. Sales amounted to 600,000 shares.

Liberty issues again featured the bond market, about 80 per cent. of the turnover representing those flotations, which ranged slightly over yesterday's final prices. Total sales (par value) aggregated $17,350,000. Old United States bonds were unchanged on call during the week. REX OIL

The representative who recently returned from an inspection of the physical properties in which the Rex Oil Company own royalty interests, sums up his report in the following significant conclusion:

"The Rex Oil Company, as owners of interests in these leases, are particularly fortunate in having secured them during the period of early development, as leases are practically beyond purchase today. Taking the properties in which they are interested as a whole, I would say they are about one-third developed. The additional work of drilling is being completed as fast as material and labor will permit, and when this work is completed the earnings of the Rex Oil Company should be increased many times, as practically every acre of these leases are proven property, and a very large increased production is practically assured as the development progresses."

REX OIL

The likelihood of greatly added production as a result of present and future drilling operations upon Rex Oil royalty holdings, leads us to predict that this popular Oil (which is now available at 15¼c) is in line for sharp advances, especially upon the report of gusher production which is likely at any time, while a steady increase of production means added earnings and dividends, which, in itself, would justify the belief that those who purchase now are likely to reap good market profits.

In addition to this he ran splendid interference and mussed up more than three attempted forward passes of the flyers.

HUNTER SHOWS CLASS.

Herb Hunter, former Coast League ball player, also was one of the stars of the game. Hunter snagged a forward pass and raced more than twenty-two yards to a touchdown with nobody near him. The former ball player acted like a track man on the field, getting down on punts and with time to spare before the receiver could even get started.

In the last quarter the Rockwell players finally got started. Hall blocked a drop kick attempted by Fred Haney and picked it up on the Sub Base 48-yard line and was finally downed on the 6-yard line. Two attempts to break through the Sub Base line only netted two yards and on the following play Murphy circled right end and crossed the goal line. He also kicked goal and this ended the scoring for the visitors.

MADDEN FUMBLES.

About seven minutes later a fumble by Madden after he had made a neat 14-yard run around the right end found the ball on the Gob's 36-yard line—the bobble giving the ball to the deep-sea boys. Kincaid and Lucas simply mauled their way through the aviators' defense for gains of 8 to 12 yards. Pieroth also contributed his bulk and brawn in advancing the pigskin to the flyers' 42-yard line.

Because of the progress made by the smashing tactics of the Sub players the San Diegans brought the secondary defense in as close as possible. Discerning this Haney called for a long pass which was tossed by Herb Hunter. Haney received the ball on the 22-yard line and sprinted across the goal line. He

FAIR DOUBLES COMPLETE.

Men's Event Snappy; Adams and Warren are Winners.

The doubles finals in the Liberty Fair tennis tournament for the county championships were completed yesterday at Exposition Park and the new owners of the titles hung up their laurels in the halls of fame.

In the junior doubles finals Ferrandini and Hunley disposed of Stillwell and Berry in three hard-fought matches, the score going to 5-7, 6-2, 6-3.

The men's doubles finals was short and snappy, Adams and Warren winning from Sinsabaugh and Braly by the tally, 6-3, 6-3. Sinsabaugh's famous little cuts were not working as well as usual and he did not hold up his end of the games in the doubles as he did later in the mixed event.

Mrs. Henry and Sinsabaugh got in some pretty work in their match with Mrs. Rameson and Ketchum. Mrs. Henry used a number of lobs, confining her efforts to aerial attack and getting away with it in great shape. Sinsabaugh came back in this match and the two worked together with a good display of team work, downing their opponents to the tune of 8-6, 8-6.

DAY OF REST FOR NEW-YEAR RIVALS.

Yesterday was practically a day of rest for both the Marines and the Great Lakes teams. In the morning the Great Lakes squad was taken up Mt. Lowe and shortly after lunch held a very light and short workout.

Coach Dietz is following his old policy of driving his men and yesterday though the practice was shorter than the day previous the men were put through the usual running up and down the field and through signals. In the afternoon the entire squad and Coach Dietz attended the Sub Base-Rockwell Field game at Washington Park.

A stiff workout has been lined up today for the Marines, while Coach McReavy of the Great Lakes squad will continue with the regular limbering-up exercises which consist of nothing more than running down under punts and going through plays. Coach McReavy said that no scrimmages will be held before the big game.

MOTORISTS TO ASSIST BIG NEW YEAR'S FETE.

Good riddance to a year of bloodshed and war and a wild welcome for the new year with its wonderful prospects for peace and prosperity will be tooted from thousands of automobile horns Tuesday night when Los Angeles will hold the first great New Year's eve carnival since the world plunged into war.

Los Angeles proposes to forget the past and celebrate the coming of a year of peace in genuine style and plans that are being formulated tell of a programme worth going miles to see. Starting with the dusk on Tuesday evening parades, fireworks, streamers, bands and a great free programme by motion picture folks at Central Park will kiss the old year good-by and welcome the new year with a wallop.

ORGANIZED FETE.

Festivities of an organized nature will commence about 7 o'clock when a big parade will be held downtown announcing the big doings which are to follow. This will break up by the time theaters open and then the main celebration will start a couple of hours later with a huge automobile parade and fireworks.

The parade is open to all comers and as a nucleus the Automobile Dealers' Association have volunteered to enter 250 decorated machines. The association also has offered a prize of $25 in regular money to the best decorated automobile, anybody who wants to do so being allowed to enter a car.

Bob Weaver, who has been appointed boss of the parade, has announced that it will form in front of the S. F. Seager & Co. salesroom on Figueroa street near Sixteenth, and anybody wishing to enter an automobile for the cash prize will have to have their machine at the appointed place at 10 o'clock in the evening.

The parade will get under way about 10:30 with decorated automobiles and trucks, the latter carrying bands and fireworks which will be exploded along with aerial bombs en route. The parade will go down Figueroa to Seventh, Seventh to Broadway, Broadway to First, First to Spring, Spring to Seventh, Seventh to Broadway, Broadway to Ninth and disband.

GOLF PLANS FOR EARLY 1919 ARE GROWING.

BY BUNKER BUNK.

The selection of a place for holding the championship of Southern California for women golfers is now under consideration as well as the date. A committee has been appointed to arrange these details and to conduct the tourney. It is made up as follows.

Mmes. M. E. Hart, Altadena; R. D. Davis, Annandale; C. P. Thomas, Brentwood; Luther Kennett, Coronado; Warren Smith, Culver City; Martin Abernethy, Indian Hill; Frank Griffith, Los Angeles; E. W. Alexander, La Cumbre; Henry S. Van Dyke, Midwick; Homer Robinson, Orange county; D. C. Lefferts, Redlands; C. A. Perley, San Gabriel; R. L. McCrae, Victoria; A. C. Holliday, Virginia and Miss Irene Couts, Point Loma.

The membership of the Southern California Golf Association for 1919 will not offer any changes by way of additions or withdrawals. The newly-appointed Executive Committee of the organization shows the following personnel:

President, Edward B. Tufts, Los Angeles Country Club; vice-president, Thomas McCall, Brentwood; vice-president, A. D. S. Johnson, Annandale.

N. W. Hamilton, Altadena; D. N. Hunter, Annandale; Judge Lewis R. Works, Brentwood; Maj. Colon C. Ross, Coronado; George D. Beven, Culver City; D. M. Linnard, Huntington; J. S. Aborn, Indiana Hill; Robert J. Cash, Jr., Los Angeles; W. R. Nygatt, La Cumbre; George L. Weber, Midwick; F. B. Browning, Orange county; Oliver Hicks, Redlands; George T. Cline, San Gabriel; H. K. Elston, Santa Barbara; R. D. Skelley, Victoria; W. W. Campbell, Virginia.

Secretary-treasurer, E. H. Bagby, Los Angeles.

Local golfers are taking a rather keen interest in the gridiron welfare of the Marines who meet Great Lakes football representatives at Pasadena on New Year's Day on account of Earl Holland, one of Brentwood's first flight shooters, having come from Mare Island as business manager of the Marines. He has taken advantage of his temporary return to Los Angeles to look up many of his old friends of green and fairway.

Work has just about been completed on the handicap list of the Southern California Golf Association and the names will be in the hands of the printers in a short time.

There may be some surprises when the list is issued as some changes in last year's figures are forecast.

Peace offerings of cigars and pet clubs and maybe golf hose are too late now. The work has been done. There are to be 1350 names on the list this year.

The invitation tournaments this year will bring some intense preliminary cogitation on the part of the golfers who always like to figure out possible winners. All of the surrounding clubs lost heavily by answers to the call of war.

In those who went into the various forms of military service were scores of first flight players from all of the clubs. This is giving the second flight some rays of hope that they may come through as winners, but there is still the thought that some of these cracks who went to war will be back in time to play.

Right there comes the brain bunker for the boys who insist on making out a book for themselves and their friends.

Many of the boys who have been in service have been so situated that a golf club has to them become as strange a looking implement as a topsail on a submarine. Their form is going to be about that of the hired hand in the hornet's nest. Then there are others who may have been so located as to make play possible when they could get away from cantonment or ship and some of these are apt to show up with the ability to drive straight enough to shoot gophers in the right eye at 225 yards rise.

It is very easy to see where, with a goodly number of the service men back in the play their former form may be so reversed that were they thoroughbreds at Tia Juana the stewards would declare off all bets and start an investigation.

With these facts in mind the association cannot alter any old handicap figures for them. They do not know who is up on his game at present and those who will need side as well as fore caddies to keep track of their swings.

It is all very hazy, all very much given to muddled dope and may the best men win.

GREAT HIGHWAY TO OPEN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CALEXICO, Dec. 27.—Gov. Cantu of Lower California has set January 5 as the date for the official opening of the new national highway connecting Ensenada and Mexicali. A celebration of the event is to be held at Aguijito, sixty miles west of Mexicali. Invitations have been extended to American officials and citizens to join in the celebration, which will include a beef barbecue and a programme of music and speeches in Spanish and English. Since he has been in the Governor's chair, Col. Cantu has permitted nothing to interfere with his desire to construct a national highway to the Pacific Coast, and the celebration next month will mark the realization of his ambition after three years.

There are very few cars built with which it would be fair to compare the Peerless. It would be distinctly unfair for any car selling at or near the same price to subject it to a comparison with the Peerless.

A fair comparison can only be made with cars selling at a higher price. Without exceeding the Peerless price by $500 or more, we claim that a comparison in quality and performance will establish Peerless superiority. It is, therefore, an exceptional value car and gives a sound value for every dollar of its purchase price.

The Peerless organization has been a producer of fine motor cars since 1901—the reputation of its product at once justifies the judgment of the purchaser.

While not sold on strictly a price basis, yet the price is moderate in comparison with other fine cars.

Standard models for immediate delivery can be delivered for $2880.00.

They are free from the disagreeable delays and annoying interruptions of travel incident to cars which lack the high quality of the Reo.

NO USE WAITING TO BUY.

Changes in New Models will not be as Great as Some Think.

BY BARNEY OLDFIELD.

A friend of mine stopped me on the street the other day and said: "Barney, I've been calculating on buying a new car just as soon as the factories start running, but they tell me that after a few months the manufacturers are going to put out cars that won't even look like the old ones. They say they've learned so many things during the war that the next run of cars will be supercars. What do you think about it?"

All I answered was "Bunk." And so it is.

It is true that our manufacturers have learned a great deal from their war work, but most of this has been along the lines of manufacturing experience. You can bet our makers have learned how to build cars faster than they ever did before, and that's going some. But I don't believe the engineers and designers have learned a great deal that will tend to revolutionize motor car design. The cars that we shall get during 1919 will not differ greatly from those of the 1918 crop; not more, in fact, than any ordinary year from the year before.

I am inclined to believe that the principal development brought on by war activities in the automobile industry is a better understanding of the use of metals than ever before. I think within the next few years, that is to say after the industry gets back on a normal basis, there will be a very much wider employment of alloys, particularly those embodying aluminum.

I hear a great many persons saying that airplane design is going to have a great effect on the future of the motor car. Perhaps it may, but the influence will be indirect. The problems that airplane designers have to solve have little or no application directly to automobile engineering.

Many of the lessons learned in design of automotive vehicles intended for military use are quite useless for ordinary commercial production of automobiles. The armies get the very best that there is regardless of cost. Welded steel cylinders, for instance, proved their value, but this is not to say they will ever be used in cars intended to be sold to private owners. As a matter of fact, this form of cylinder would be too expensive for commercial production.

It is an unfortunate fact that the greatest part of the improvements instituted in wartime design have had to do with the engine, which was already the most advanced unit in the mechanism. Taking a survey of the advancements in design achieved during the last few busy months makes it appear as if the engineers could see only the engine. Undoubtedly this will prove beneficial in the long run, but in the meantime the transmission, the clutch, axels and other parts of the mechanism which were badly in need of improvement have been left practically as they were.

I believe that it will be quite two years before the American buying public begins to get the real benefits of the lessons learned in the war, in so far as design goes. And even then I don't believe that the cars will be very radically different from these of today.

The place where the automobile-buying public is going to find the first effect of the war is going to be in quantity production, plus refinement of equipment and appearances. The intensive demands of modern war compelled our automobile industry to speed up its production methods, which had always been noted as the most rapid in the world. In this way our makers have learned short cuts in production that were undreamed of before the war. As a result I believe that there will come in good time a crop of really attractive cars selling at $500 and below, which will carry such equipment as speedometers, starting and lighting, demountable rims, etc.

The deeper understanding of metals gained by war experience will, undoubtedly, result in reduction of weight under present standards. This will mean reduction in gasoline consumption, and it will also mean reduction of tire wear.

There may be a temporary craze for military effects in body lines, but I do not anticipate that this will last. Development of body refinement will probably continue to undergo a course of evolution, just as in the past.

There is a good deal of rather loose talk in the air about the rivalry that our automobile industry is going to be up against from foreign makers. Undoubtedly the British, French and Italian car builders have learned a great deal from their experience in turning out military vehicles of various kinds. Certainly all of the big automobile factories abroad have been very largely increased during these last years to care for the war orders that have been given to them. Undoubtedly they have learned a lot in the matter of quantity production; they had to or see their countries overwhelmed. But, on the other hand, our makers had already mastered this phase of their art. I doubt that any European industry, even with its increased facilities, can even approach our pre-war standards of production. That European builders will be able to come over into our own land and even give our manufacturers a fight for the home market is impossible. They will unquestionably give us a hard battle for the export business of the world. But even here we will have the jump, if we take proper measures to preserve our head start gained while our allies were struggling with the Hun.

I believe that the Fiat Company in Italy intends to offer a car at somewhat under $2000 in this country. This vehicle follows conventional American lines, with a small high-speed engine, designed to turn up something over 3200 revolutions. The British cars like Rolls-Royce, Sunbeam, Welsley, Vauxhall, Arrel-Johnston and others of that type will probably sell in this country on just about the same scale that they did before the war. The French Renault, Peugeots, Delages and the smaller fry will have a certain market in America, but it can never be a great one. It costs too much to put one of these cars in an American buyer's hands. By the time the tariff is paid, the price is out of reason. And so it will be to the end.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Barney Oldfield: The magneto binding post or termination of top of the transmission cover is clean. I had it off and poured coal oil into the hole to wash away any possible dirt or accumulation. I noticed the last time I had off the transmission cover that the place of contact of the magneto terminal on the coil assembly was very much roughened. Is it probable that this has become displaced and no longer makes good contact?

H. M., Hellertown, Pa.

The magneto coils are burned out, not all of them, perhaps, but enough to cause insufficient current generation or no generation. This does not mean the coils on the dash, but the coils in the magneto itself. Perhaps the coils are short circuited. The starting and lighting system has nothing to do with the action of the magneto. I imagine that it may be the magneto instead of the coils as the magnets become weakened long before the coils might be suspected of being destroyed.

The regular washer is good enough, why change?

Barney Oldfield: Kindly inform me where I can purchase a preparation to fill up cuts in tires caused by running over glass, etc.

F. M. H., Philadelphia, Pa.

Any garage that carries supplies, any tire store, any supply store or any of the rubber companies.

Barney Oldfield: Please advise, where I can get a rebound check for on the springs of a Chevrolet (490) model touring car.

H. C. G., Hughesville, Pa.

I believe you will have to use ordinary rebound straps or Gabriel snubbers as it is not possible to fit the ordinary types and get results. A good supply store can take care of you on both.

Barney Oldfield: I am the owner of a 1914 Ford and I have trouble in starting it. If I run, say fifteen miles or so and then stop, I have trouble getting the engine started again, even while it is hot. One cylinder fires and then it backfires or kicks. Hot or cold it is just the same. When I get the engine going it runs fine. My trouble is all in starting, summer or winter.

J. G. C., Wilmington, Del.

Magneto drag causes a lot of hard starting. Your trouble is in the ignition, but just where I cannot say. Have the coil vibrators well adjusted and clean.

LIBERTY

A traveling representative for one of the large corporations of this city, whose work takes him all over the great Southwest, says that his Liberty Six stands the "gaff" of his continuous desert and mountainous work better than any other car ever did.

It combines good looks and graceful lines with power and stamina.

Lots of tourists are here now.

Here are a couple of Eastern motorists who toured out to the Coast in their Franklins and think that Southern California roads are the best in the country.

GOOD DESIGN IS NOT EXPENSIVE.

DOESN'T COST ANY MORE FOR GOOD LINES THAN FOR AN UGLY BODY.

"A paradoxical difficulty I have encountered in selling the Roamer," remarked Mr. W. D. Wright of the Wright Motor Car Company, who handle the Roamer, "is to satisfy the prospective purchasers that design is not expensive. We Americans have been content so long with ugly automobiles that the motorist has come to believe that the inartistic appearance of an average automobile represents an economy. Sometimes, for this reason, prospects, when they have seen the Roamer and been impressed with the beauty of its lines, are afraid they will be obliged to pay a premium for this same beauty, but we are always quick to explain that design is simply a matter of head work. This head work is evidenced in the creation of the original model and, once that is created, it does not add a penny to the cost of the duplication of that original model. In other words, it is just as cheap to make something beautiful as it is something ugly; the only difference lies in the artistic sense of the original creator."

TRUCKS COMPETE WITH RAILROADS.

LOCAL MAN BELIEVES FREIGHT-CARRYING RIVALRY WILL BE VERY INTENSE.

Freight transportation over the highways of the country is so near in its infancy that some confusion is bound to result before the work under new conditions can be systematized. Reload bureaus are being organized throughout the country, and these are helping to bring order out of chaos. It is the opinion of Wallace O. Gates, manager for the Gates-Kelley Automotive Company, the Smith Form-a-Truck representatives on this Coast, that eventually there will be a national organization for freight transportation by motor trucks that will be so efficient that merchants can route their shipments in the usual railroad style for long and short hauls.

Such an arrangement will bring the truck lines into direct competition with the railroads, and they will have to show equal efficiency. This will demand an organization with competent clerical help so that there will be no more delays than are incident to railroad transportation and, if possible, they will have to be better.

SOMETHING NEW WILL BE SHOWN.

BRAND NEW MODEL TO MAKE DEBUT AT THE MOTOR SALON.

The remarkable decorations and various forms of amusement provided by the committees in charge for the coming automobile show will not be the only surprises that will greet those attending. There will be a number of new car models on display that have not been seen at any other show in the United States. James L. Irving of the Irving Motor Car Company, distributors for the Cole eight and Elgin six, is one of the dealers promising something new in passenger cars that will be sure to attract interest.

Further than saying that he has tried out the car and is satisfied that it is a peerless performer in all ways, Mr. Irving is noncommital. "Just at this time, it behooves every dealer to do his best to create interest in the show," Mr. Irving says. "For that reason we are delaying an important announcement, but we shall have more to say in another week."

HIGHER FEES FOR NEW MEXICO CARS.

STATE HIGHWAY ENGINEER HAS AN IDEA FOR RAISING MORE MONEY.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) Dec. 22.—Higher license fees for motor vehicles and the transfer of licensing power from the Secretary of State's office to the State highway department are suggested by State Highway Engineer James A. French in his annual report to the Governor.

A proposed bill probably will be placed before the State Legislature, would raise the revenue from motor vehicles to approximately $200,000 a year for the number of vehicles now under license. Seventeen thousand licenses were issued in 1918, bringing $105,000 gross revenue to the State. The engineer's report says it is proposed to submit the bill to the Governor for his consideration. Provision for the issuance of licenses by the State highway department would be made by the same bill. Under this plan the entire receipts would be diverted to the road fund, the report says.

DON'T BOOST HIGHWAYS.

Transcontinental Motorists Say that the Roads are in Rotten Shape.

They have come from almost everywhere—eastern motorists to escape the rigors of the winter at home. All, in the same breath, express their gratitude at being here and condemn road conditions it was necessary to combat in order to get here. The same things they say about poor roads now, they will repeat upon their return home and the lesson for California to draw from that is that this State must inaugurate a national movement for permanently improved trascontinental highways, or, if such a movement is fostered elsewhere this State must lend whole hearted aid.

Many motor tourists who made the start for California this winter turned back and gave up the attempt before crossing the continental divide. They were so provoked by the roads that they refused to continue, according to reports received by Ralph C. Hamlin, the Franklin distributor, from tourists who made the trip in Franklin cars. Some had their cars shipped the remainder of the distance to Los Angeles and continued their journey by train, but there were many who gave up the undertaking in despair and returned home.

Hamlin's establishment on South Flower street last Monday had the appearance of a transcontinentalists' mecca. Franklin owners arrived from Oklahoma, New York, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and Toronto, Can. On other days during the week came cars from Missouri, Ohio and Nebraska. One was shipped from Montana for the use of its owner here, and others came by train from Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. In the fourteen years that he has represented Fraklin cars in Los Angeles, Mr. Hamlin says he ever has known as many visiting motorists to be here as have assembled for this winter.

There will be practically no more arrivals who drive through, according to F. M. Selby, who made the journey from Tulsa, Okla., in a Franklin sedan. He and his family came to the coast via El Paso and Mr. Selby asserts the only way to describe touring conditions at this time is by saying that there are no roads at all. It is necessary to follow trails that at times are only ruts and others merely streaks in the sand.

A. B. Ormsby and family drove from Toronto, Can., in a four-passenger Franklin roadster and devoted thirty-two days to covering the 3500 miles. "We were in no hurry," he said, "and it was a good thing we were not. Some days we covered as much as 200 miles and other days we could make but 50 miles. The difference indicates the varying road conditions. We traveled via Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago, Kansas City and the National Old Trails Route. I should estimate that the roads were 80 per cent. rotten.

"East of Kansas City this was due mainly to the unusually heavy travel of the summer months. They used trucks for a large part of the freight hauling back there and hundreds of them were kept busy delivering supplies to the various cantonments. The roads evidently were not built for trucks and would not hold up. Government restrictions made repairs almost impossible so the combination of more traffic than ever with an absence of maintenance has resulted in the practical ruin of the principal highways.

"We crossed the continental divide at Magdalena, N. M., and at one time there were thirteen automobiles stalled in the road ahead of us. It was a case of wait until they were towed out or plow around them and this we did successfully. Some of those people had to stay in their cars all night while waiting for help. We were not stuck at any time and never had a tow line on the car. It impresses me our Franklin's light weight was a wonderful factor in getting us through the bad places. The motor never was touched by a tool of any kind. We had only one puncture and used chains on the tires for less than ten miles of the 3500, hundreds of which were through rain, snow and slush."

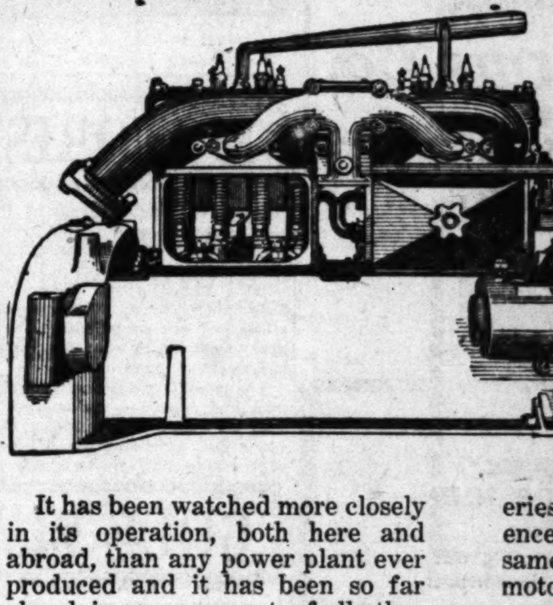
Liberty Truck Motors in Moreland Trucks



This is another great advance in heavy-duty motor truck design — a motor made from the combined experience of the leading motor and motor truck engineers and manufacturers of the country to fill a need that could not be filled as successfully by the average commercial vehicle.

It has been watched more closely in its operation, both here and abroad, than any power plant ever produced and it has been so far ahead, in every respect, of all other truck engines that it is being retained as a commercial unit by the makers that produced it for Government use.

We are the first truck maker in the country to install it commercially and do so with every confidence in its absolute worth.

A considerable number of deliveries have been made to experienced users and each report is the same—"It is the most wonderful motor yet produced."

We want you to see this motor to understand how well it is designed, how thoroughly it is made and how necessary it is in your heavy duty work. Come to our factory and get first-hand information.

Prompt deliveries can be made on four-ton and five-ton Moreland Distillate Trucks equipped with this Liberty Truck Motor.

TIRE CITY GROWS FAST.

ron Continues to Boom Whether War Orders Keep or Not.

peace came, Akron, O., was war rubber products in quantities. The signing armistice brought abrupt cancellations of orders for dirigible and kite bal- slickers, ponchos and other goods. Notwithstanding, hastened on at top speed— of the huge rubber facto- on with hardly a rip-

Thus, as the war progressed, the tire production was diminishing at a rapid rate.

Today, the labor shortage in Akron is acute. Mr. M. D. Bixby of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company in Los Angeles has received word that that company needs 3000 men immediately—principally tire builders and finishers. In addition to this army of workers, the company will place all of the 3371 employees wearing the uniform of the United States in their old positions as they are released from cantonments and returned from overseas. Goodrich officials point out that thousands of dollars' worth of orders for solid and pneumatic tires and tubes are being delayed by the labor shortage.

Goodrich was unusually well fortified to resume quantity tire production because of their policy to retain men taken off tire production and transferring them to war work on gas masks and balloons. Consequently, hundreds of tire experts were held in readiness to be reinstated in their old positions.

Akron's steady industrial growth during the past ten years has been remarkable, but the present dawning era of prosperity transcends any previous period in the history of the city. Officials of the Goodrich company estimate that between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 tires will be manufactured in America during 1919, approximately three-fourths of which will be made in Akron. The rubber city's twenty-one tire manufacturing concerns, turning out from 100 to 25,000 tires a day, face a period of activity and expansion difficult to duplicate in any other section of the country.

With unprecedented expenditures to be made on the nation's highways; with the establishment of thousands of rural motor routes and rural express lines; with commerce crying for more and more motor trucks; and with the strong, healthy demand from the prosperous farmer and city man for passenger cars, the future of the automobile industry is assured.

NEW LIGHT TRUCK MODEL IS PUT OUT.

SPECIAL SIZE FOR RAPID WORK WITH SMALL LOAD IS READY.

In announcing the Master Junior, of which models are now ready for delivery, the Sherlock-Keene Motor Company, local distributor of the Chicago-built trucks bearing the Master name, says:

"This one-and-one-half-ton Master is an ideal size for the farmer, or the owner who wants a truck for rapid delivery of medium-sized loads, especially if the owner happens to be located in a territory where roads forbid the operation of heavy models over excessively muddy or sandy thoroughfares. This truck is in no sense a converted passenger car design. The units entering into its construction find no place in passenger-car use, but are, on the contrary, of specialized truck design.

COAST CHAMP TO BE NAMED.

Ascot Winner Gets Title and Also a Trophy.

Nature of Prize has not Yet been Divulged.

Lots of Fast Cars Here for the Big Event.

The Pacific Coast will have a 1919 champion to send to Indianapolis to compete in the $50,000 event May 31. It was decided yesterday by the Ascot management to hinge the championship for the Coast on the coming races at the Los Angeles speedway and give to the winner a handsome trophy—valued at $500—to carry East as proof of his speed prowess.

Cliff Durant won the 1918 title for the Coast at Tacoma this year. He already is an entrant at Indianapolis, but whether he will seek the 1919 honors at Ascot has not been announced. His Chevrolet special is in the city and ready to go.

The Ascot season will be confined to two events, George R. Bentel said yesterday. The first will be January 26 and the other date remains to be chosen. However, it will not be before March.

The January 26 race programme will be the victory sweepstakes with a cash purse of $5000 in real money. In addition there will be the trophy, which now is being selected. There has been some indecision as to whether it should be a trophy of large proportions or a highly valuable watch fob which the winner might wear.

"We want to send a 1919 champion to Indianapolis from Ascot," said Bentel. "We are in hopes that the Pacific Coast speed king may also capture the honors at Indianapolis. It will be necessary, however, for the holder of the trophy to defend it in the subsequent Ascot race, for we want the champion to really be one in act as well as name.

"There is a tremendous lot of interest in the coming event, and in another week we will be able to announce the entry of some very popular drivers I was amazed to find so many fast cars on the Pacific Coast. We will have as fast a field as ever started at Ascot. If we use the heat system we will not want a large entry list, for the events will be so very fast we believe in protecting the drivers by keeping the slower cars off the course.

"The qualifying trials will be held immediately before the start of the race, so that the spectators may see that they are on the square, and caught by the official timers. Starting positions are of particular value when the heat system is used, for the field gets away with a rush, and it is vital that not one advantage be lost."

MANIFOLD SELLS ON GOOD RECORD.

As a result of tests that were conducted in the East to secure definite data on fuel-saving devices for automobiles, the sales of Holley vapor manifolds for Fords have jumped tremendously, is the information that has just been received by the California Sales Company, distributor of the well-known device.

"It is this avalanche of orders from the Middle West and the Central Atlantic States that has virtually snowed the factory under. While every effort is being made to hurry the new Holley plant to completion it will be some time before increased production commensurate with the demand will be effected," stated an official of the distributing concern.

NEW SIGNS PLACED ON BUSY STREETS.

Installation of the nifty new safety zone signs furnished to the city by the Automobile Club of Southern California has been completed in the downtown district. These signs will be kept in first-class shape by the sign-posting department of the Auto Club.

Now More Than Ever Before Is the Cadillac "Standard of the World"
Sheer merit won for the Cadillac the position it now holds.
It is recognized as "the world's finest motor car" because it deserves such recognition.
Since the performance of this car in France, "Standard of the World" assumes greater significance than ever before.
United States Army officials found it to be the one car that came up to their standard and their standard was "the very best."
The eagerness everywhere to obtain the few Cadillacs being built is not solely due to their scarcity. War has bred in America a sober habit of buying things which endure.
The Cadillac has always been valued as a magnificently smooth, steady piece of motive power. In addition, it is now recognized as a prudent investment of uncommon value.

PREDICTS A GREAT YEAR.

Big Factory Head Gives Out Season's Plans.

Government Contract Soon to be Completed.

Local Man Sees Transports at New York.

November 5 was a big day at the Nash Motors Company plant at Kenosha, Wis., for the Nash distributors, throughout the United States and Canada had gathered to hear Mr Nash tell his programme for future production. Two meetings were held on the 5th, going into the production programme in general and on the evening of the 5th a banquet was given by Mr. Nash and interesting topics were discussed by various members of the factory organisation and distributors.

James J. Storrow of Boston, who is chairman of the board of directors of the Nash Motors Company, was present at the meeting. Both Mr. Nash and Mr. Storrow dwelt upon the fact that the great prosperity was ahead and while it would take several months for all lines of business to return to normal conditions, there is sure to be an avalanche of business, such as this country has never before seen or heard of. It is generally admitted that the signing of the armistice at such an early date came with some surprise to those looking forward to the supplying of munitions and the great preparations being made for this class of work will naturally cause losses that will be keenly felt.

H. J. Coger, manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, who has just returned from an extended visit in the East, also had an opportunity to view business conditions from several of the largest cities in the East. Having extended his visit to the Atlantic Coast, spending a few days in Boston and New York. In addition to a business tour, Mr Coger had the pleasure of seeing some of our large transports land in New York, bringing home boys who had so gallantly fought for their country in France. While it was possible to see many a pathetic sight, all the boys were glad to get home and even though they were absent an eye, arm or a leg, he never saw one with a frown. And it is with just such pride and determination that will respond to America's call at home to make the next five years the greatest from the industry standpoint that we have ever known.

SOME MORE SHIPS MEAN MORE TIRES.

SOUTH AMERICAN RUBBER WILL BE BROUGHT HERE FOR BIG FACTORIES.

"The government has released 500,000 additional tons of shipping facilities to ply between the United States and South American countries. This increased tonnage will no doubt enable tire manufacturers to secure larger quantities of rubber in the future, at least enough to offset the increased demand for tires which will continue to grow during the coming spring months," declared Louis Lichtenberger, president of Lichtenberger-Ferguson Company, factory distributors of Norwalk tires, in an interview yesterday.

"The rubber plantations in South America had not stopped producing rubber, so that there has been plenty of rubber, but the difficulty has been in transporting it to this country," continued Mr. Lichtenbergen. "With the 500,000-ton shipping facilities which have been diverted to South American traffic, this country should be able to secure adequate rubber shipments. The Norwalk Tire and Rubber Company is planning to make steady shipments to this territory and we will be able to fill all orders without the inconvenience of stock shortage."

EASY APPLICATION MAKES IT POPULAR.

"The many people who have come in to get a free sample can of Duro-Lac has given us a fine opportunity to find out the reasons why motorists have not kept the finish of their cars in better shape," says Mr. Frank Webster of the International Sales Company. "Invariably the answer has been that the tedious rubbing necessary with polishes has been the one great drawback," says Mr. Webster, "and likewise it has been the quickness of application which has created the interest in Duro-Lac."

ROUGHING PEDALS.

The pads of the various pedals on the car inevitably become smooth from the constant pressure of the shoes. When an emergency arises and the foot is pushed down on this smooth surface a slip results that may spell disaster. To prevent this the pedals may be removed, placed in a vise and roughened with a diamond nosed chisel and hammer.

CAMP GROUNDS FOR AUTOISTS.

Automobile Club Gets Back of the Movement.

Engineers Recommend a Site to Commission.

Los Angeles Only City with no Accommodations.

At the request of the Automobile Club of Southern California the city of Los Angeles is considering the establishment of a public camping ground for motor parties. The matter has been brought to the notice of the City Council and will be considered by the Park Commission in the near future, the site proposed by the Auto Club engineers being located in Elysian Park.

For many years the lack of camping accommodations for touring parties has reflected on the hospitality of the "capital of motoring." Nearly every hamlet in the State provides excellent camping accommodations for the traveler who does his journeying via the gas and rubber route. During the touring season the Auto Club has been visited by three or four parties per day inquiring the location of Los Angeles' auto camp.

In proposing a location the Auto Club engineers took into consideration the matter of water supply, forestation, proximity to the business and theater district, and other equipment. The site decided upon in Elysian park consists of about one acre, heavily timbered and near to water, capable of accommodating about thirty parties at a time. It is located exactly two miles from the North Broadway entrance to the park.

Several California towns have provided motor camping grounds that are the last word in efficiency. In some cases free gas and electricity have been provided, in addition to plumbing and other conveniences. One enterprising little city has gone so far as to install shower baths. Local motorists are rejoicing that Los Angeles, with more paved roads and motoring facilities than any other city in the world, is about to remedy the glaring defect that has given her a reputation for inhospitality with parties that have driven clear across the continent to enjoy her beauties.

The following California cities have provided camping grounds for motor touring parties: Stockton, Pomona, San Diego, Sacramento, Santa Monica, Perris, Nevada City, Red Bluff, Petaluma, Downieville, Ukiah, King City, La Jolla, Redlands, Oroville, Tulare, Fresno, Atascadero, Santa Maria, Salinas, San Bernardino, Mendocino, Eureka, Newberry, and Placerville.

The matter of public camping grounds is under consideration at the following places, several on this list having already selected sites which will be equipped in the near future: San Luis Obispo, Taft, Oakland, Lindsay, Santa Barbara, Santa Ana, Long Beach, Santa Rosa, Chico, Bakersfield, Healdsburg and Ventura.

WIRE ORDER CAN NOT BE FILLED.

PULL-DOWN CURTAINS MUST BE FITTED INTO THE TOP IN LOCAL SHOP.

"Send me by express soon as possible set of roller curtains," came a wire to the George R. Bentel shops on Grand avenue yesterday from New York. The sender had just seen a car equipped with the new Bentel devices, and which had been taken East by a Los Angeles man prominent in the motion-picture industry.

"I am sorry that we cannot respond to his request, for he evidently is in a hurry," said Bentel. "We must place the curtains in the top in our shops. This is a 'tailored' rather than a 'ready-to-wear' job. Each top has its own requirements, and every [illegible] that is installed is made to fit that particular job. We are putting the curtains in our permanent tops. This is the most satisfactory method of installation. Then the motorist can convert his open car into an inclosed type in a minute without getting outside of the car. It is on the same principle as pulling down the shades in one's home."

LIGHT TRUCK IS IN DEMAND NOW.

There has been an increased demand for the light truck during the past few weeks which would seem to reflect an increase in industrial and commercial activity, according to W. D. Dunham, the Ford agent on West Seventh street, who reports a large number of inquiries just recently in the Ford one-ton truck.

One of the features of selling commercial vehicles, is the desire of a business house to get convenient service, says Mr. Dunham, by which is meant a close-in service station and yet out of the congested district, where valuable time will not be lost in negotiating traffic.

It is predicted that in the East with the coming of spring there will be a tremendous demand for CHALMERS cars. That means but one thing and it is this: To meet this demand at that period fewer CHALMERS will be allotted to Southern California.

In normal times California receives its largest supply of cars during the winter, because there is a decreased demand in the East at this season. But with the CHALMERS factory swinging from war production to one of peace, conditions are not normal, and for this reason the supply of CHALMERS—the greatest automobile buy there is—is very limited. We earnestly advise you to buy a CHALMERS now. The price is guaranteed until June, 1919.

One way of saving money in the ice business.

Behold the four-ton Moreland truck of Harry R. Beal e, who carries ice in it from Brawley to Calipatria, a distance of twelve miles, in the Imperial Valley. By means of this truck he saves some 25 per cent. of the ice which used to melt while waiting for the train.

LIBERTY TRUCKS READY.

The announcement that the Moreland Motor Truck Company was ready to begin delivery of its four-ton and five-ton trucks, equipped with the Liberty class B truck motor, has created a very great amount of interest. Watt L. Moreland, general manager of the Moreland Motor Truck Company, feels deeply gratified that this announcement is the first of many similar ones that will come from other makers in the next six to nine months.

Naturally, with a sweeping announcement of this character must come a certain amount of criticism, and in some cases, disbelief in the Moreland company's statement that these motors, which were designed for government use, were available commercially. In order to prove false many statements that have been circulated around Los Angeles and in other parts of the Moreland company's territory as to the quality of the Liberty motor installed in Moreland trucks, Mr. Moreland wired the Continental Motor Corporation at Detroit, the largest engine makers in the world, and the largest producers of this class "B" motor, asking them for a statement as to the quality of the motors we were being supplied, and received in reply a telegram as follows:

"The Liberty Class B truck motors furnished to your company are of the same quality as those we are supplying for government purposes. Any statement to the contrary is incorrect. [Signed] Continental Motors Corporation."

This telegram proves absolutely that the Moreland equipment is the standard government production and, while Mr. Moreland regretted publishing this story, he felt that it was due to the public at this time, especially those people who were not familiar with the Moreland method of doing business. The old Moreland owners and concerns who have been at all familiar with Moreland operation could not entertain such doubt.

The Moreland Motor Truck Company will exhibit one of these motors and a chassis at the Auto Show in January, as well as having one taken apart so the entire construction may be understood and comparisons made.

REAL BATTERY SERVICE.

The lengths to which some automobile or accessory firms go in the matter of giving service on automobiles is little appreciated by the average motorist, for they have become so accustomed to receiving extraordinary service that a whole lot of it is taken for granted with never a thought of what it may mean to a firm to have everything for a customer just when he calls for it.

Take, for instance, the matter of the rent battery which the battery people have to give to motorists when they want to have their own battery recharged or repaired; in order to have just the style and type of battery it is easily seen that a tremendous large stock must be carried at all times in order not to disappoint any one who may need one.

"We are trying to have motorists see the wisdom of coming down to us and have our experts test them and keep them properly filled with water," says A. J. Tobey of the Western Auto Electric Company, who have the Willard battery for this territory. "By this method we can tell fairly accurately how a battery is getting along and when it needs to be put on the 'line' for a recharge, as they all do sooner or later."

REAL TEST FOR HIS CAR.

Few owners know what their automobiles will do, because they never have put them to the severest kind of test. Boulevard riding in Southern California does not put a car to its mettle, but cross-country driving at this season of the year will bring out everything, in the opinion of J. A. Garver, a prominent business man of Des Moines, Iowa, who has arrived in Los Angeles with his family after making the trip in an Apperson anniversary model touring car.

Mr. Garver, in conversation with E. W. Johnson, sales manager at the local factory branch of the Apperson, cited in substantiation of his claims an experience that befell him on the trip. Traffic was tied up by a particularly bad piece of road in Texas, as it was necessary for motorists to take their turns with the assistance of a team of horses. When it came the Garvers's turn, they were told it was no use to try and drive through without help, as dozens of other cars had made the attempt and all failed.

"All right, go to it," Mr. Garver told the driver of the team. But out in the midst of the mud, the horses quit on the job. They plunged and reared, but could not drag the car. Finally the harness broke and the driver told Mr. Garver he had better stay where he was until he went for repairs to the harness. But Garver did not like the idea.

"You've had your trial, now let me have mine," he said. The horses were unhitched, Garver applied the power, and aside from a bit of lunging about, had no trouble in extricating the car under its own power.

CLIFF DURANT ENTRANT NO. 1.

California Speed King Gets a Distinction.

First to Enter Great Event at Indianapolis.

Millionaire may Sit at the Wheel Himself.

To Cliff Durant, millionaire sportsman and automobile manufacturer and Pacific Coast racing champion, has fallen the honor of being entrant No. 1 in this year's revival of the great 500-mile Indianapolis Speedway motor classic, scheduled for May 31.

Formal entry blanks for the big event have not yet been issued, but Durant's nomination of his Chevrolet special, made by wire to Vice-President Allison of the speedway association has been officially accepted, and he has been listed as the first of the world's great racers to seek honors in the $50,000 speed contest.

Durant has withheld the name of his driver, and it may be that some pilot other than the western champion will be seen at the wheel of the Chevrolet. However, the "millionaire whirlwind" has long coveted a chance to compete on the Hoosier oval with a real racing car under him, so in all probability he will be at the helm himself when the starter drops his flag on the all-star field.

Pacific Coast racing fans are looking to the Chevrolet owner to uphold their honors against the pick of the driving talent of this country and Europe. At Tacoma last summer, on a course somewhat similar to that at Indianapolis, Durant proved his mettle by winning his championship at an average speed of nearly ninety-nine miles an hour, far faster time than has ever been recorded on the big brick Indiana track. In other races, notably at Chicago two years ago when he finished second, and at Bakersfield and at Fresno, when he defeated H. S. Patterson in defense of his championship title, the California "demon" displayed plenty of nerve and skill, and he is given a great chance to be among the leaders in the biggest race on the speedway calendar.

Just previous to the announcement of the Indianapolis Speedway officials that they would revive the $50,000 event, Durant declared he was through with the gasoline game, and that his great Chevrolet racing car and the rest of his $12,000 track equipment was for sale. But with the greatest race of them all again on the programme, the champion decided to retain his machine, and lost no time in nominating it as a starter in the classic.

"Entering the Chevrolet at Indianapolis does not mean I will drive it myself," said Durant. "I am in communication with two of the most famous pilots in speedway circles, and perhaps will make arrangements for one of them to uphold Chevrolet honors in my stead.

"I would like very much to represent the West in what will probably be the greatest race ever run, but at this time it is not at all certain I can do so. However, the "Made in the West" Chevrolet is a sure starter, and Pacific Coast racing enthusiasts can be assured they will be represented, regardless of who is at the wheel of our car."

We Absolutely Guarantee Present Maxwell Prices

You have never seen an advertisement featuring the service performed by the Maxwell Motor Company in "Helping to win the war."

Nor will you. We do not believe in capitalizing our loyalty to our country.

Nor has our patriotism been as profitable as would have been our normal, legitimate, peace-time business.

Maxwell factories were, when needed, devoted to war work—just 100 per cent.

Let it go at that.

We did not capitalize a deplorable condition—nor take advantage of it to put a fictitious price on the Maxwell.

Which brings us to the point on which we wish to state some plain facts.

Recently you have seen announcements of price reductions on some makes of motor cars.

These seeming reductions (we use the term "seeming" advisedly!) have given the average buyer an erroneous impression.

That impression is to the effect that the price of motor cars generally is above normal and will come down in the near future.

Now, as a matter of fact, that is not the condition at all.

There is no warrant for any such assumption.

Just analyze the situation yourself and see if our statements are justified.

Recall the prices that existed on certain makes of automobiles before the United States went into the war and compare the prices of those same cars today.

You'll find that any reductions that have been made were necessary.

In a word, they apply only to cars that were over-priced—war-time priced—before such reductions.

For example:—Consider four makes of cars that formerly were priced in close competition with the Maxwell.

Compare their pre-war (normal) prices; their war-time "peak" prices, and their present "reduced" prices. We'll designate them "A," "B," "C," and "D."

	Pre-War Price	War-Time "Peak" Price	Present Price
Car "A"	$795.00	$1095.00	$985.00
Car "B"	990.00	1285.00	1185.00
Car "C"	635.00	865.00	745.00
Car "D"	725.00	985.00	985.00

From the above it is clear that some "reduced" prices are still too high.

For when the price of a product was increased by 33 per cent and then dropped back ten per cent, you can't say it has yet been put back where it belongs!

And that is just what happened in several cases.

Just consider a moment:

If a maker is able to drop back to "pre-war" prices today, on what basis did he justify his war-time price? And especially his most recent war-time "peak" price?

Certainly he bought no materials while we were in the war—he could not.

If he bought them before, then he bought them at the same rates we did!

In that case there was no real reason for his excessive war-time "peak" price.

If he cannot justify his prices of yesterday, can you accept his statements today?

Only gauge you have as to the intrinsic value of his product is—its pre-war price.

Especially is this so if the model he is offering you today is precisely the same model he offered you then, but at 20 to 25 per cent advance now over his then prices (even after his recent reduction).

Is it not logical to assume that, as his price yesterday was fictitious, it is still almost equally so?

It costs more to build a motor car today than it did a year ago.

Materials are higher—wages are higher. All costs are higher.

It will continue for a long time to come on the present scale we believe.

Tell you why.

Materials are now in demand by the whole world—will continue to be during the years of reconstruction in Europe.

Especially is this so in the case of steel, copper and other minerals.

Rubber also will likely range higher.

Rubber is the biggest single item of cost in a motor car and it is in great demand.

Wages will never go back to the pre-war scale.

Every student of the problem is now agreed upon that.

You have read in the newspapers lately the statement by the United States Steel Corporation that that concern is not going to reduce wages—and that concern is the biggest employer of labor in the world.

It is well!—pass the prosperity around and we will all get our share.

If the mechanic gets more pay, all lines of business benefit—and more people are able to buy motor cars.

We can see no reason to expect that the cost of manufacturing a Maxwell Motor Car will be less in a year from now than it is today.

War or no war, the price of the Maxwell product would have been precisely what it is today.

We did take advantage of the War-time condition—but only to incorporate in this new model several changes and improvements.

Factory busy on war work, our engineers and tool makers had a brief respite—and we used that to perfect the Maxwell product.

We have spent more than $100,000 on special tools for more accurate finishing of parts.

Cylinders are now ground after reaming—formerly only reamed. That is only one of many similar refinements.

This new 1919 model Maxwell, deliveries of which will begin immediately, is a superior product.

It is a larger car—a more commodious body.

Gasoline tank is at rear instead of under front seat—costs more, worth it.

The new Pantosote top adds greatly to appearance as well as to serviceability. Graceful in design. In quality—the best.

Seats are deeper, softer—better springs, better materials.

Maxwell Motor Cars do not belong to the "Cheap Car Class." This product is the undisputed leader in the Refined Car Class.

By "refined" we mean in a mechanical sense.

Maxwells are not made to fit a pre-determined, nor to meet a competitive, price.

They are designed to fill a certain definite demand for a light car of quality—internally as well as in outward appearance.

We first make the car as it should be made, then set the price.

We do not cut our price to meet the price of a car of inferior quality.

Nor did we, as we have shown, take advantage of a War-time excuse to raise the price to a fictitious figure.

Had the war continued and we had not made another car, the buyer of the last Maxwell would have paid the regular price—and no more.

The Maxwell policy is clean and it is consistent—we are not "opportunists" in business.

Those changes and refinements in this new 1919 model actually cost more than the difference between its price and that of the 1918 model.

So the price of this new Maxwell should have been more.

But we are content to accept a smaller margin of profit per car in the interest of greater volume so have continued that price on this 1919 model.

There are today more Maxwells in hands of users than of any comparable car—we are counting on the splendid quality with the low price of this latest model to maintain that leadership.

"But talk is all right," you say.

You want something definite, something tangible to tie to.

Very well—here is your guarantee.

Price of the Maxwell Motor Car today (Touring or Roadster model) is $895.00 f. o. b. Detroit, Michigan, and we absolutely guarantee that price until June next, 1919.

Every Maxwell dealer is authorized to give you that guarantee in writing at the time of purchase of your car.

Some makers have announced reductions—others will follow.

So far, however, we have seen no real reductions—though there have been some genuine increases of price since the war closed. There will be more of the latter, too!

In buying a Maxwell Motor Car you know precisely where you stand.

And our guarantee of the price is your best guarantee of the intrinsic value of this product.

So buy the Maxwell you need—get your order in early.

Maxwells may go to a premium—price may have to be increased—but we guarantee you absolutely against a reduction.

PREPARATIONS FOR SHOW.

Monster Motor Salon will be Held in Three Big Tents.

One peep into the monster workshop where the decorations for the annual automobile show are being prepared would make anyone gasp. Never has there been an exhibition of any kind in Los Angeles so elaborately decorated as this show will be. The immense tents on the Prager Park property at Washington and Grand are in place, the floors are practically completed, and tomorrow the decorators will begin moving in with their truckload after truckload of hangings, draperies and set pieces. The tents will be under guard and the decoration scheme will be kept secret for at least another week.

Chairman P. H. Greer announced yesterday that practically every foot of space has been contracted for. All the available room for motor cars and trucks is taken, there remaining only a few hundred feet in the accessory division.

The motor cars will be in the two large tents, fronting on Washington street and Grand avenue. The two main entrances will be into these tents. The exhibits will be around the sides and in the center, with twelve-foot aisle spaces. There will be no divisions between the exhibits, which will make it easy to walk from one exhibit to another without using the aisle. This will make it possible to accommodate a much larger crowd than usual.

The decorations, in themselves representing a value of $150,000, will be unique in automobile shows. This gorgeous decorative scheme will be a wonderfully colorful and interesting setting for the motor display which will represent the wide range of that versatile industry. From limousines and ponderous trucks, to the smallest accessory, the entire scale will be run.

There will be forty passenger car exhibitors. Half as many will display trucks in the commercial vehicle division. And seventy-five will exhibit accessories, by far the most comprehensive display of this sort ever gathered in Los Angeles. Surprising to many will be the large number of these accessories that are manufactured in this city.

These exhibits will be housed in three tents—the largest that could be procured on the Pacific Coast. And Los Angeles, the motor metropolis, would have been forced to forego the show had it not been for these tents. For this city is wholly without a building suitable to such purposes. The municipal auditorium, such as other cities have, is still a hope here.

Two of the tents were rented from the Orange Show Association of San Bernardino. These are among the largest—if not the very largest—in the world. The show committee, overcoming obstacle after obstacle with undaunted determination, finally found the third tent, the largest that Los Angeles could produce. So with the combined canvas resources of Southern California, the ground work for the show was laid.

P. H. Greer, president of the Los Angeles Motor Car Dealers' Association and chairman of the show committee, has served night and day untiringly with Ralph C. Hamlin and Don Smith to bring the scattered ends together. From out of the chaos inevitable in an undertaking of this size, Chairman Greer has built an effective organization which is now progressing with clock-work precision.

Every available foot of space has been utilized, so valuable is exhibition room. The spaces at the sides of the tents will be twenty-three feet deep, while the center exhibits will be thirty feet. The aisles will be so arranged that every exhibit has free and equal access.

The entertainment feature of the show is being worked out on an elaborate scale. In the first place there will be three bands — count 'em, three—and the music will range from the classic heights to the jazz that gets into the feet. The motion-picture industry here will be honored with a special night, Wednesday, January 15. The following night will be for society.

The decorators are now at work. Where? No one knows but Chairman Greer, and he is just as secretive as a sphinx. The decorations will move into the tents some time this week, but not until they have to, for it is the idea to keep the valuable hangings under protection of the secret studio as long as possible.

The entire space in the tents is floored, a gigantic task, covering some 150,000 square feet. So with wooden floors beneath foot and the wonderful decorations overhead and at the sides, the transformation from tents to a fairyland will be complete.

CARS COMING FOR SHOW.

Smith Brothers have been assured that a shipment of new Peerless eights will reach Los Angeles from the factory in ample time for the coming automobile show. Stanley W. Smith is elated over this information, as he feared the transition period at the factory would seriously interfere with production for some time to come.

The holiday period has brought about a renewed interest in the motor car which is very marked, according to Smith, who also stated that the two-power range feature of the Peerless eight is one that has created much favorable comment on the part of prospective buyers as well as those who have purchased Peerless cars. Without touching the gearshift of a Peerless the driver may throttle down to almost imperceptible motion, and with a lightning-fast pickup he has [illegible] horse power at his command, he stated.

In commenting on the economical performances of the Peerless, Smith pointed to the wonderful record made by the Peerless which won the second annual economy run to the Yosemite Valley last summer, in the high class division.

BIG DEMAND FOR AUTOS.

It's one thing to be permitted to make more motor cars, and it's another to turn them out. Every factory in the country is fairly exploding with the energy and noise of whizzing machinery, struggling in a vain effort to get production closer up to demand.

"To take a factory that has been concentrated on standardized war contracts for many months," said George W. Franklin of the Leach Motor Car Company, distributors for Dort, Mitchell, King and Premier, "and change it over to passenger-car production is a Herculean task, one that cannot be accomplished by a mere snapping of fingers. It is only the flexibility of the modern American factory that makes it possible to do what is being done so rapidly in this direction.

"It is recognized by authorities that production is to be somewhat curtailed for many months. It is a certainty that no manufacturer could return to a prewar working basis for some months, even should the government withdraw the restrictions. These facts, coupled with the return of over a million men to private life mean that the demand must exceed the production.

"Never in the history of motordom, even in my close association with activities in the great manufacturing city of Detroit, have prospects for greater sales been evidenced. People today are veritably clamoring for cars. This change has come about since the war ended. We have been obliged to add to our sales forces new men continually, it being almost impossible for us to keep up with the prospects, and my advice to those who are really thinking of purchasing a motor car within the next few weeks is that they lose no time—that they pick out the car they have in mind and buy it now while it is still possible to make deliveries."

CLOSED CARS POPULAR.

Frosty mornings and chilly evenings of the last few days have diverted attention of motor devotees strongly in the direction of the various types of inclosed automobiles, which models accord the maximum of comfort and protection from the elements in addition to their luxuriousness and distinctiveness.

Among the sales closed during the week by S. F. Seager & Co. was one for a handsome, luxurious Jordan six town car to Mrs. E. H. Blakeslee, who presented the car to her daughter, Mrs. R. C. Smith, as a Christmas present. It is one of the most distinctive and most attractive automobiles seen in the streets of Los Angeles, and it has created a decidedly favorable impression everywhere it has appeared.

In the case of the Jordan six, the inclosed types for this season are distinguished by new and advanced custom bodies, made unusually desirable through an exquisite finish in a variety of optional colors. The bodies are all aluminum and are produced in shops that for generations have employed the most expert and painstaking body artisans. The bodies are lower in keeping with the style tendencies. The line of the roof, the delicate angle of the rear quarter, the shape of the doors and the curve of the fenders reveal the rare good taste of the body artisan.

The Jordan town car is patrician in every line of the body. Practical in every respect to the wishes of the occupant for utmost in comfort and convenience; attention has been devoted, too, to the richness of appointments. The delicate artistry exhibited in the choice of upholstery both in color and pattern add to the interior that atmosphere of richness which can be felt but not adequately described.

TRUCKS DO WORK OF FREIGHT CARS

FIVE TONNERS AND TRAILERS DO JOB IN ONE-SIXTH RAILROAD TIME

The part that motor transportation in war times played in feeding the people was of tremendous importance. Of one item alone—sugar—motor trucks hauled nearly all that was consumed in Los Angeles. The bags of sugar, weighing [illegible] tons, were carried by two five-ton White trucks and their trailers from Anaheim and Los Alamitos to Los Angeles. This meant, according to Roe Sanderson of the [illegible] Truck Company, whose concern had the contract for the hauling, the White trucks were forced under stress of war time, to run [illegible] hours a day, each truck [illegible] fifty miles per day.

The amount of time saved in hauling with motor trucks in preference to railroads, is almost unbelievable. Figuring the time lost in loading, consumed in switching, [illegible] making a complete round trip of twenty-five miles, it takes a freight car six days to make one haul, which can be duplicated in one day by a five-ton White truck and trailer.

The part that motor transportation in war times played in feeding the people was of tremendous importance. Of one item alone—sugar—motor trucks hauled nearly all that was consumed in Los Angeles. The bags of sugar, weighing sixty tons, were carried by two five-ton White trucks and their trailers from Anaheim and Los Alamitos to Los Angeles. This meant, according to Mr. Roe Sanderson of the California Truck Company, whose concern had the contract for the hauling, that the White trucks were forced under stress of war time, to run sixteen hours a day, each truck making fifty miles per day.

The amount of time saved by hauling with motor trucks in preference to railroads, is almost unbelievable. Figuring the time that is consumed in switching, loading and making a complete round trip of twenty-five miles, it takes a freight car six days to make one haul; which can be duplicated in one day by a five-ton White truck and its trailer.

FITTING BEARING.

ing a bearing on the front wheel which it is a tight fit, owners often mistake of slipping the bearing onto f the spindle and forcing it home by he wheel on and hammering wheel and at the same time. Frequently the houlder of the inner race is broken by tion, because it is intended to withstand but not sudden shocks like this. The method of doing the job is to slip a short pipe over the spindle and hammer the carefully until the bearing slips into which the wheel should be put on.

One of the scenic beauty spots of Southern California.
Party in an Oldsmobile Eight taking in the wonderful view from Smiley Heights, Redlands.

BEAUTIFUL SUNDAY TRIP.

While easterners are shivering under the lash of winter's icy blasts, and motor cars are beginning to find their way to the garage for storage until next spring, Californians are out in the open obtaining the maximum enjoyment from nature's wonders that have been so bounteously bestowed upon the Southland.

In this land of sunshine, flowers and boulevards, the open country is constantly calling the outdoor enthusiast, and particularly does it beckon the motorist. Conditions are ideal for reveling in the scenic grandeur of this vast garden spot; the cool tang of California winter atmosphere is invigorating; it adds zest to the trip as the motor car quietly purrs its way over ribbons of pavement.

Probably no trip offers a greater variety of scenic magnificence combined with deligtful travel than the jaunt to Smiley Heights, that vault of natural splendor that is comparatively little known to Los Angeles motorists. Thousands of Angelenos have driven to Redlands, marveled at the glorious colorings of the orange groves, the distant hills and the many points of local interest, but the beauty of Smiley Heights has not been exploited to its fullest advantage to attract its just share of attention. But its day is coming.

Just on the outskirts of the city of Redlands is Smiley Heights, from which eminence there is spread before one's eyes a vast panorama of orange grove dotted valley, with snow-capped mountains in the distance, while from another direction there spreads out the Little Colorado Desert, also hemmed in by towering hills.

There is such a bewilderment of nature's splendor that it is difficult to find words to describe it, according to L. V. Starr of J. W. Leavitt & Co., distributors of Oldsmobiles, who returned Sunday from a trip to Smiley Heights. One must visit the place to fully appreciate its rare beauty, he said.

The party in the Oldsmobile eight followed the Foothill boulevard to San Bernardino, then to Redlands and Smiley Heights and returned by way of Riverside and thence over the Valley boulevard. It was described by the Oldsmobile enthusiasts as the most enjoyable single-day's trip to be found out of Los Angeles.

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS.

With the coming of the New Year there will probably be the usual crop of good resolutions made of one kind and another, for it seems to be a starting point from which we always resolve on making some change in our way of living, or our method of doing things, and following this there will no doubt be the usual number of backsliders who believe apparently that a resolution is made to break, and who makes it simply to have something to break.

During the past two years we have all had a very good lesson in thrift and economy, and it did not take a New Year's resolution to make us conserve and preserve labor and materials, for as a patriotic duty we saw and did our best along this line, and out of this has come not a pessimistic penurious attitude, but rather a broader idea of spending money with the full sense, however, of getting the most in the way of value for the dollar.

Money was made to spend, as someone has said, and it does us all good, as it is kept circulating, but what we have learned, which will stay with us for some time, is the matter of cutting out waste and the New Year's resolution which Saving Sam, the little trade character of the Western Auto Supply Agency, has drawn up for Mr. Every Motorist.

NEW YEAR'S EVE PROMISES SPORT.

MOTOR PARADE AND CARNIVAL INTERESTING TO THE EASTERNERS.

The proposed carnival celebration New Year's Eve is creating interest among visiting motorists from the distant East, who are not accustomed to such occasions. They will be found participating to the fullest extent in the event which appeals to them as unique and novel. Several visiting owners of Chandler cars have made inquiry of Earl V. Armstrong, Inc., the Chandler distributors, to learn if there will be anything in the nature of a parade or programme.

"We certainly are looking forward to this New Year's Eve celebration with a great deal of genuine interest," stated B. J. Lanning, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who brought his Chandler sedan here to help in the enjoyment of the winter months, to Don P. Smith, of the Armstrong organization. "We never had heard of anything of this kind before. Of course, in Grand Rapids, it is very rare that we can drive our car at this time of the year and that is one reason why we expect to take part in the carnival. We appreciate what a great thing it is to be in Southern California at this time and are making use of our car constantly in the enjoyment of such pleasures as are to be had here and here alone."

NO NEW MODELS WITH NEW YEAR.

COMPANY WILL CONTINUE THE NIFTY CAR MADE LAST SEASON.

Having adopted the policy of returning to normal production under the direction of the government as relates to use of steel products, the Oakland Motor Car Company through H. C. McVey, the Los Angeles dealer, has announced the continuance of the Oakland car known as Model 34-B for the 1919 season. At this time, only a few of the well-known manufacturers have determined upon their reconstruction policy. Several of the leaders, however, have made the tentative announcement they probably will continue their 1918 series through the coming year, the Oakland being one to decide positively on this course.

"The period of experimentation in motor cars can be said to have passed," states Mr. McVey, "and this applies to the Oakland Motor Car Company. The first of the so-called sensible six models proved so satisfactory that the line has been continued with practically no important changes into the fourth year. The 1918 series Oakland will be continued right into 1919 without mechanical differences. The 1919 series calls for plate glass in the side and rear curtains, a very pleasing feature, but this is regarded in the nature of equipment and not alteration in the car proper."

LOCAL CARBURETOR TOPS PIKE'S PEAK.

A Colorado concern which operates a fleet of motor busses between Colorado Springs and the summit of Pike's Peak, is the medium through which the Master Carburetor Company has received many inquiries from all parts of the United States regarding this Los Angeles-made carburetor, according to E. M. Chandler, sales manager for the company.

The route traveled by these tourist busses is the same over which Day Lentz piloted his Master-equipped car to victory in the Pike's Peak climb of 1916. The winning of this event by Lentz interested the manager of the bus line to the extent that his entire fleet was equipped with Master carburetors.

CATTLE TEAR UP OUR BOULEVARDS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TULARE, Dec. 24.—Damage estimated to be at least $1000 was done to street paving in construction here when a Portuguese rancher drove a herd of dairy cows past the warning signs and through a quantity of soft concrete, being laid for the street foundation.

City officials state a bill will be presented to the owner of the stock and that if settlement is not made a suit will be brought for attachment of the cattle for the amount of the estimated loss.

NORTHERN ROADS ARE FIFTY-FIFTY.

Motorists who drive north at present will find that the coast and valley routes offer advantages about equal, according to Doug Rhodes, engineer for the Automobile Club of Southern California, who has just completed an inspection of the two roads. In the opinion of Rhodes the few additional miles of paving on the inland route are more than compensated for by the scenic qualities of the coast road.

MOTOR LAWS TO BE DISCUSSED.

Proposed motor vehicle legislation will be discussed at a conference of motoring authorities to be held in Los Angeles early in January. The meeting will take place here at the invitation of Attorney David Faries of the Automobile Club of Southern California. J. W. Stetson, attorney for the California State Automobile Association will preside. It is predicted that a new system of issuing licenses and the enforcement of the headlight law will be the main topics under consideration.

AEROPLANE MOTOR IS MUCH IMPROVED.

More and more are there indications that the development of the airplane motor during the past two years is going to play a very important part in the future of the automobile because so many of the prominent engineers in signed articles have come out with such beliefs.

This has all been very satisfying to us, says Mr. F. H. Nelson of the Nelson Auto Company, because it substantiates the theory of the designor of our car—Mr. E. A. Nelson of Detroit, who was quick to see the advantages of the airplane type motor and who has built it into the car bearing his name, and which we distribute in this field.

FORD TIRE CARRIER.

For temporary or emergency use the prop rest which holds the top of the Ford runabout may be pressed into service as an extra tire carrier by turning it upside down and using the strap to hold the tire. Naturally the top must be left up when this is being used, as one side will be likely to rattle if it is folded.

STATIONARY POWER PLANT.

An old motor that has about outlived its usefulness in a car may be made into an admirable stationary power plant in the garage by running a belt from its fly wheel to an overhead line shaft, from which the power is diverted by belts to lathe, emery wheel, etc.

LIBERTY MOTORS TURNED OUT FAST.

The five thousandth Liberty motor built by the Packard Company was shipped on November 21, a week after its final assembly in the Packard shops, and a week ahead of the first anniversary of the completion of the first Liberty engine ever made from standard tools.

It was on Thanksgiving Day, 1917, that the first Liberty motor to come from an organized production line came from the production line of the Packard. Wrapped in an American flag, it was shipped the same day to the American aircraft forces.

Production of the Liberty motor still goes on. Packard's original order, for 6000, will be completed, at the present rate of production, in less than thirty days.

MOTOR SALON FOR CHICAGO.

Show will be Divided Into Two Sections.

Passenger Cars Hold Floor for One Week.

Then They Make Way for the Husky Trucks.

Chicago will stage its nineteenth annual Automobile Show starting January 25 and ending February 6, at the mammoth Coliseum, and the First Regiment Armory.

There will be an innovation in that the first eight days—January 25 to February 1—will be given up to a passenger car and accessory show. February 2 the buildings will be closed to the public, and from February 3 to 6 there will be an exhibition of motor trucks, the first Chicago has had in a number of years. For the latter event the Coliseum alone will be used.

In character of exhibits and in general effect the Chicago Automobile Show will take on all the pomp and magnitude of its predecessors. It has the indorsement of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce and the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers' Association.

Months ago work was started on the decorations and the huge settings for both buildings will be completed in ample time for the big exposition. Last year the artist evolved a decorative scheme in which the colors of the United States and the Allies associated with it in the great war were featured. He has another plan for this winter which is said, by those who have seen his efforts, to be up to the standard of former years. L. L. Fest, who is well known in national automobile circles, as usual will have complete charge of the installment of the decorations. Show headquarters are located at the Auditorium Hotel.

Thousands of visitors from out of the city are expected during the time the passenger car and motor truck shows are running. Especially true will this be of farmers and stockmen from the Corn Belt and the Northwestern section, who have prospered during the war times and have learned the value of automobiles and motor trucks in their work.

Large volume of business is looked for, not only from the out of town visitors, but also from persons who have put off purchasing new cars until the end of the war.

Chicago hotels will be prepared to handle a large number of guests, and merchants and local associations will aid in making the period one of interest and gaiety.

MOTOR SALON IS A HUGE SUCCESS.

Several persons rushed into the Packard salesrooms of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Thursday evening to give notice that the building was on fire but it proved a false alarm as the glare that came from the roof was the result of red fire. With brilliantly lighted store and the sky glowing from the fireworks on the roof the Anthony firm was celebrating the opening of one of the most beautiful motor car salons that has been staged in Los Angeles by an individual dealer.

They had on display for the end of the week a wonderful assemblage of custom-built special models which were designed and produced to their special order and are affording the public a pre-showing of the cars that will be seen at the automobile show next month.

THIS MAN KNEW WHAT HE WANTED.

There may be some people at times who do not know just exactly what they want in the way of an automobile, but such was not the case at least with one party who came into the salesroom of Fahy-Atterbury Company last week and purchased a Ford sedan, which happened to be standing on the floor. It seems that he had gone into another place to buy an enclosed car and some salesman had tried to make him believe that an open car would do just as well because he happened to have no sedans and the salesman had been so insistent in hanging on and arguing that the prospect had become sorely ruffled, and when he hit Fahy's there was fire in his eye.

COLORS.

The color of the motor car is generally a case of "every man to his taste," but it is a fact that the dark colors are generally more lasting. This is caused by the physical characteristics of the color varnish, which has a base of gum. Now, the dark gum is more serviceable than the light shades, and the dark varnishes are derived from the dark gums. The lighter colors call for lighter varnishes and the wearing qualities are decreased.

RUBBER CEMENT.

Rubber cement becomes very thick and "tacky" after it has been exposed to the air even for a few minutes. Many car owners use gasoline to thin the cement, but the ordinary grades of gas are unsuitable for this purpose, because there is oil in them. Bisulphate of carbon or very high test gasoline are about the only thing suitable for thinning the cement.

RUNNING WIRES.

In running wires through the apron above the running board the hole needed should be bored with a power drill. A hand drill will probably make an unsightly scar. The wires should be inclosed in a conduit to obviate possibility of their chafing through.

Look for the Brand

The Willard brand is more than a name. It's a sign of reliability, responsibility and protection to the buyer who wants the genuine Willard Battery with Threaded Rubber Insulation. The Willard brand means a hotter spark—a quicker start—brighter lights, and vitality to carry overload and work overtime.

In the Threaded Rubber Insulation of the Still Better Willard—in the expert workmanship—in the complete Willard service—there is greater assurance of long battery life.

Undoubtedly due to excess of carbon. I would suggest that you overhaul your cylinders, and remove the carbon.

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME, NO. 638.

"Dundee-Switcher."

The two interesting games were played at the clubrooms one evening last week, between Hopewell and Drouillard.

Black—Drouillard. White—Hopewell.

12-16 21-17 9-13 24-20 11-15 20-11 7-16 23-18 5-9 18-11 8-15 27-23a 3-8b 23-18c 16-19d 18-11 8-15 32-27 4-8 a—Played to get 9-14, when White gets a fine game by 28-24, 14-21, 24-20.

b—This seems very strong for Black, and better than the usual 16-20.

c—It is doubtful if White has a sound draw after this move; either 25-21 or 28-24 look safe.

d—Black now has a powerful game—perhaps a win.

e—I looked at 22-18 for some time, but finally decided I had a better chance to draw with 27-23 two moves later.

f—Drouillard hesitated for a long time here, debating on which square to place this man. The following analysis seems to show 15-19 would have won.

15-18 23-16 12-19 24-15 10-19 17-10 6-15
31-27 1-6 27-24 6-10 22-18 15-22 24-6
2-9 28-24 22-26 24-19 26-31 19-15 31-26
15-10 26-23 10-6 9-14 6-1 14-18 1-6
18-22 6-9 22-26 9-14 26-31 B. wins

g—Black now looks strong enough to win, but I have failed to find a hole in the White defense.

h—Playing for 20-24 when Black wins by 13-17, etc.

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME, NO. 639.

"Dundee-Switcher."

Black—Hopewell. White—Drouillard.

12-16 21-17 9-13 25-21 16-19 24-15a 11-25 29-22 5-9b 28-24
9-14 23-18 14-23 27-18 8-11c 26-23 4-8 30-26 8-12 32-28
11-16 24-20 16-19 23-16 12-19 20-16 19-23d 26-19 6-9 18-15
10-14 17-10 7-14 15-10 1-5 22-18 14-23 16-11 13-17 21-14
9-18 19-16 18-22 28-24 23-26 24-20 26-30 11-7 Drawn a—23-26 is generally taken, but Drouillard secured a good game with 24-15 against both Jordan and Banks.

b—This gives Black a better game than developing from the single corner.

c—10-15 looks very good here.

d—This looks promising, but seems to let White out of a hard position.

GAME NO. 115—PETROFF'S DEFENSE.

Resigns

a—I prefer KtxP, although PxQP is also good play.

b—Kt-QB3 or B-K2 is usually played here, but the text is quite safe, too.

c—Rather exchange queens and play PxP. Now White has to play an ending with a pawn behind.

d—White has contrived to get an ending with bishops of opposite colors, so as to give him better chances of a draw.

e—Black, of course, must get his bishop on the diagonal where it can take pawn if moved to R7 and White threatened K-K3 stopping this.

f—A great mistake, after which White cannot prevent the queening of Black's rook's pawn. Mr. Goerlich shows a draw by P-B4 ch, KxP; PxP, P-R7; B-B6, etc.

HANEY STARS.

kicked the goal and the hopes of the visitors went a-glimmering.

After the last touchdown was made by Haney the Rockwell flyers were aware that they didn't have a chance to defeat their adversaries. When in possession of the ball, however, they opened up with some nice heaves, but the men designated to receive got lost on their way to their objectives and the ball went wild.

GAME WAS THRILLING.

Taking it all in all the game from start to finish was thrilling. It was nobody's game up until Haney made the last touchdown. Previous to this the aviators had had more than an even chance to tie the score, but they did not take advantage of the speed of Murphy and Madden, which certainly could have been used to scoring advantage on circling the ends. Instead, they were sent into the staunch Sub Base line, which proved to be impregnable.

Slover at full-back for the flyers put up a good game, while Anderson and Batz also played in tiptop form. The latter more than once got away for good substantial gains, but these went for naught when bucks were tried out on the "Gobs."

The game ended with the Sub Base in possession of the ball on the flyers' 48-yard line and with Fred Haney just beginning to get up steam. It is probable that another score would have been made had the game lasted five minutes longer because of the success Hunter and Haney were having with the serial toss.

The contest was attended by Walter Eckersall, former Chicago quarter-back, and an All-American man and who has been named to referee the New Year's game. The Marines and Coach Dietz, and Jimmy Delaney of the Great Lakes squad were also present.

It is more than probable that the Sub Base eleven and the crack Balboa Park team will clash in this city next Saturday as the latter team promised the San Pedro boys a chance at the southern service title.

The line-up:

Sub Base.		Rockwell Field.
Hooper	L.E.	Keeney
Fassino	L.T.	Webb
Andrews	L.G.	Claude
Remius	C.	Simpson
Jordan	R.G.	Doggitt
Hafer	L.T.	Allard
Hunter	L.E.	Anderson
Haney	Q.	Murphy
Kincaid	L.H.	Madden
Lucas	R.H.	Batz
Pieroth	F.	Wiley

Substitutes: Orway for Webb, Crittendon for Orway, Hall for Claude.

Officials: Jerry Abbott, referee; Dean Cromwell, umpire; "Tiny" Leonard, head linesman.

The score:

Sub Base	3	3	7	7—20
Rockwell	0	0	0	7—7

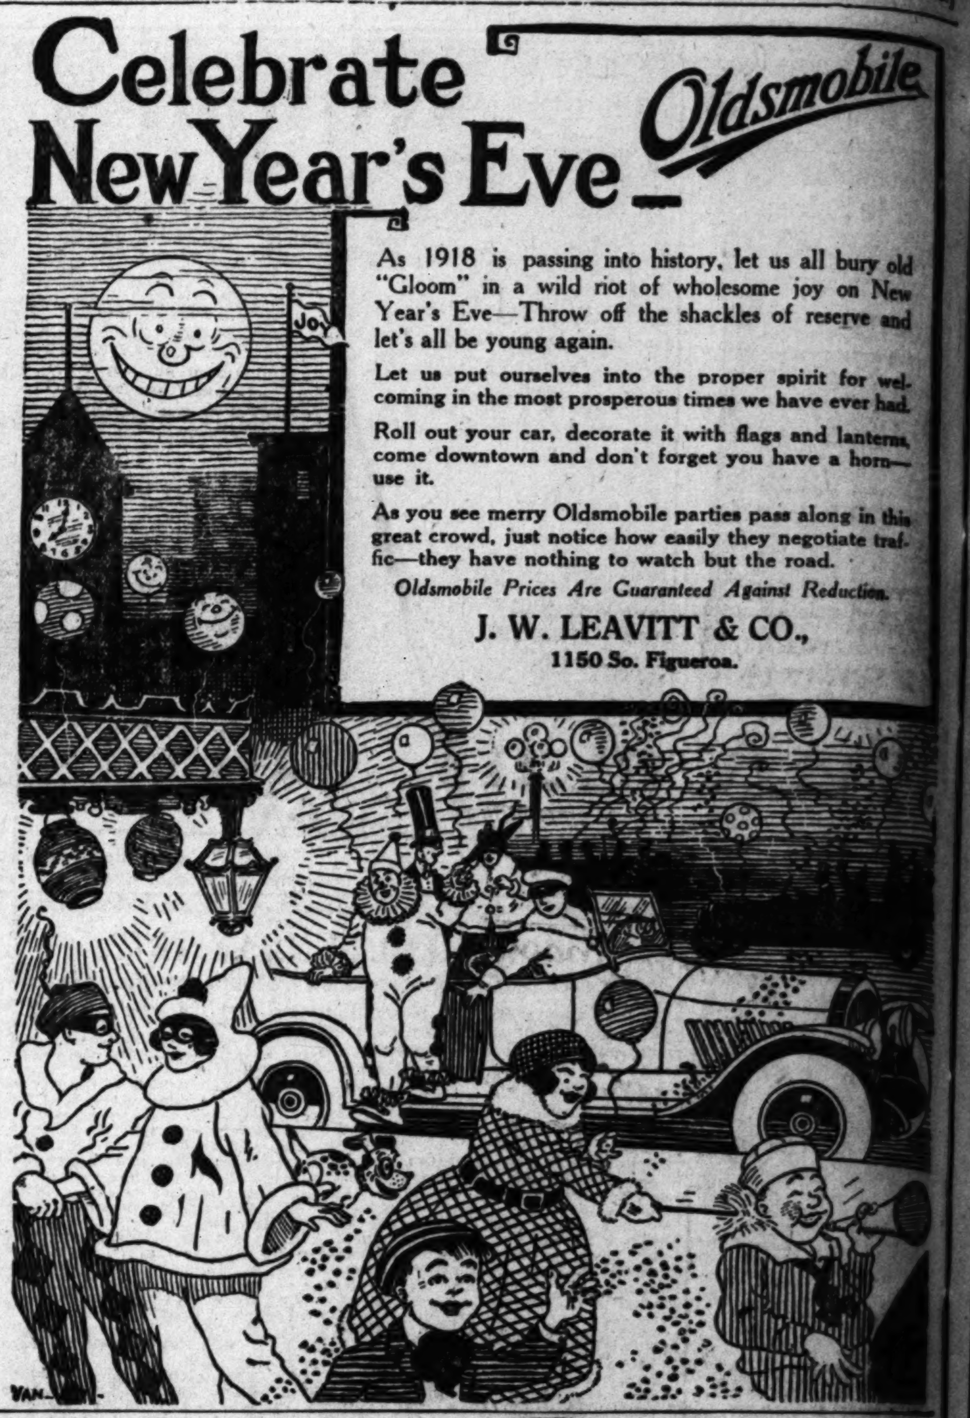
Touchdowns—Hunter, Haney, Murphy.
Goals from touchdowns—Haney, 2; Murphy, 1.
Field goals—Haney, 2.

WHITTIER STATE BEATS INDIANS.

The Whittier State School eleven wound up the football season yesterday afternoon by handing the Sherman Indians a sound thrashing. The final score was 53 to 13. The game was played at Whittier.

As in previous games Maxwell as speedy left halfback and John Paschal at an end berth did most of the scoring for the victors. Kirtley kicked five goals and ended the season with a splendid record.

The Whittier State team has won thirteen games, lost two and tied one. Long Beach High School whipped the Whittier boys 12 to 6 last week and a return game may be scheduled. Manual Arts at the start of the season handed Coach Frey's cohorts a 20 to 0 trimming, but no return game was played with the local lads.



Celebrate New Year's Eve—Oldsmobile

As 1918 is passing into history, let us all bury old "Gloom" in a wild riot of wholesome joy on New Year's Eve—Throw off the shackles of reserve and let's all be young again.

Let us put ourselves into the proper spirit for welcoming in the most prosperous times we have ever had.

Roll out your car, decorate it with flags and lanterns, come downtown and don't forget you have a horn—use it.

gramme at Central Park in which D. W. Griffith will appear in the role of chief manager. Film stars by the score will make their appearances on the stage and while the plans for the programme are not yet completed it may be stated that there will certainly be a splendid opportunity to properly celebrate the passing of the old year.

It is time to quit thinking in terms of war and get back to the old hustling spirit for which Los Angeles is famous. The people ought to crawl out of their shells and this is their opportunity to get downtown and have a good old-fashioned celebration.

Barney Oldfield: I have a Maxwell Mascot, a 1911 model, four-cylinder engine, which has been run 18,000 miles. I can open the pet cocks and the front two cylinders and the engine will speed up fast. If I open one on the back cylinder it will lose power. Can you tell me what is the matter with it? The gas gets into the crank case with the oil.

T. H. B.

The ignition in the back cylinder is poor or the compression very low. Clean the plug and terminal. Set the gap 1-32. The piston or rings of No. 4 are probably worn badly. How are the valves? The gasoline leaks down into the crankcase because the rings, piston cylinder are badly worn.

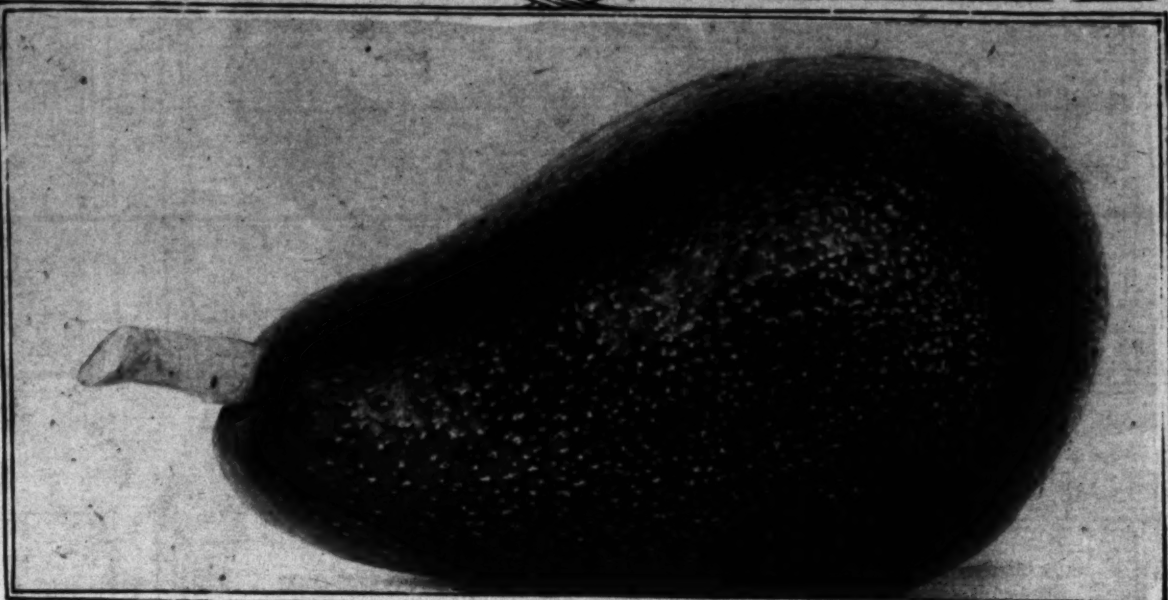
Navel Oranges for the Frozen East.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.



Fuerte avocado (natural size) grown by F. T. Whedon, Yorba Linda.

ONE of the reasons why "we" believe in the future of avocados is the fact that nearly every person who has lived in the tropics, previous to a residence in California, buys freely of the fruits here and at once sets out a tree or two for family use. Some of those who come to the "Land of Heart's Desire" from the tropics either send or go for bud wood of those varieties most valued in their former tropical home. Last week a phone message came from a woman formerly living in Havana, Cuba. She had been reading this department and wished to plant one tree in her little garden and would know where she could buy the fruits in quantity from the producer as she could not afford avocados at the prices now obtaining, yet she fain would eat many. She stated that in Havana prices were always high, owing to the enormous consumption, but by going out a few miles they could be bought for 3 cents each.

Testimony of all former residents of the tropics bears out these statements. In those countries everybody eats avocados. The writer had the honor to be appointed one of three to judge the agricultural and horticultural products at the Liberty Fair, and there saw and tested avocados grown from Fresno down to San Diego. The excellent fruits coming from points in Fresno county proves that many standard varieties are quite hardy and will stand occasional hard frosts. We know we have varieties in the South fully as hardy as the orange. At the Liberty Fair "we" met a man who was frankly honest regarding his own fruits, though he claimed much for them. He had lived thirty years in the tropics and after coming to California realized a great future was in store for the avocado in our wonderful Southland. So he hied him back to Guatemala and secured budwood of the very best; a trip costing $2500. He had one variety, the Linda, that weighs over two pounds. It is a beautiful fruit and the writer was quite shocked at the candor of the man when he said it would not be a leading commercial variety ten years hence. Said: "it is too big; a fine fancy fruit for fancy trade or the home garden, but too large for commercial purposes when avocados become as well known as are oranges." Picking up a perfectly round fruit of a pound in weight, he said: "This fruit could be run through an orange grader and standardized in pack the same as oranges, a process we will have to adopt when avocados become so cheap and common that crops will have to be handled at less cost than at present." When asked about the Fuerte, recommended for the home garden, he said: "I do not advise the Fuerte as best for commercial planting, but for the home garden it cannot be beaten" And he has not a Fuerte tree for sale. So let us plant it freely in our city gardens, although in practically frostless spots a tree full of large fruits like the Linda would prove a sight most attractive, both to the lover of the beautiful and to the lover of the avocado. Our illustration of the Fuerte is of a fruit grown at Yorba Linda, Orange county, while the one shown several months ago was grown at Altadena. The illustration is natural size.

Smyrna Fig Culture.

All those interested in the culture of Smyrna figs (called by Roeding "Calimyrna,") should send to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., and secure a copy of "Smyrna Fig Culture," by G. P. Rixford. The price is 10 cents. It contains forty pages and several illustrations. Mr. Rixford, now for many years in the employ of the Department of Agriculture, was the first man to import Smyrna fig cuttings into this country, the initial shipment arriving in June, 1880, resulting in the successful propagation and distribution of 200 trees. This bulletin, No. 732, is one that every fig grower should have.

Good Persimmons.

Several persons have written to this department of late asking for the name of the best persimmon. Several of the writers presumed that the editor of this department was the author of an article on the Tamopan persimmon which recently appeared in the Farm and Tractor Section. The writer has eaten Tamopans and all other varieties known locally. The former is a good persimmon, of good size, but not more desirable than several other varieties, nor as large as some. To the several who have asked for the name of the largest and best the writer would suggest the Hichaya. One hundred fruits were picked from one tree, each of which weighed twelve ounces or more. Seven fruits of this variety weighing between eleven and twelve ounces each were left in the writer's office for name, by Mr. Martin Wetzel, Los Angeles, who had planted the bearing tree forty-three years ago. These fruits were practically seedless and as fine as any the writer has eaten. Two Tamopans from the Orange county exhibit at the Liberty Fair were consumed at the same time and no difference could be detected in the flavor. There is very little range in the flavor of persimmons and either of the two named will no doubt prove satisfactory. But the Hichaya has been tested locally for over forty years and is one of the best, if not superior to all.

Hardy Oranges.

Many complaints are heard from those who live in low cold sections that they cannot grow oranges or other citrus fruits. Robert W. Hodgson, a writer who knows, states that those living in such localities should plant the Satsuma, the hardiest of all oranges. In many sections of California visited by the writer he has found ruins of navel orchards which had been cut down by severe frosts. These orchards are just on the danger line, where trees cannot be maintained with the hope of profitable returns. According to Mr. Hodgson, the Satsuma will pass unscathed through rather severe frosts and therefore disappointed experimenters should take heart and replant with this variety.

Rural Who's Who.

There has just been issued a rural Who's Who, under the name of "Rus," which letters stand for "Rural Uplook Service." It was compiled by Dr. L. H. Bailey, Ithaca, N. Y., and contains names and brief biography of 2746 persons. This directory includes a goodly number of Californians, some half-dozen of them being residents of Los Angeles. The volume serves the same purpose as all Who's Who except that it is confined to recognized leaders in rural work only.

Desert Holly.

For years inquiries have come respecting the so-called desert holly, to know what it is, if it is a true holly, where it can be obtained, will it grow in local gardens, etc., etc.

It is in no wise related to the hollies. It is nothing but "an old salt bush" or Atriplex, of which a dozen species, or more, grow in Los Angeles county. Its botanical name is A. hymenoletrya. It would doubtless thrive in local gardens if planted in sand or a very light, free soil. It naturally grows in sandy soils and is common on the Mohave Desert.

Garden Standards.

The standard for the art of gardening in Southern California is one of simplicity as exemplified in the gardens of the middle and poorer classes and not present in the gardens of the rich. The poor garden for the love of it, but the rich garden as a fashionable amusement. Too many costly gardens are freakish, built with the intention and expectation that they would be different from any previously made. The ordinary home-owner has no such false aims in view. He aims to make his garden attractive and satisfying, nor cares how many have one similar in chief points. This snobbish competition for the most bizzare effects has led to some fearful and wonderful gardens that please no one, not even the owner or the builder, neither of whom, as a rule, possesses good taste.

Gardening Conflicts.

To some employers all gardeners are near-criminals. You tell your latest acquisition what you like in plants and flowers. He listens respectfully, nods in acquiescence and then at once procures the plants he likes best and which he has been accustomed to growing for every employer he has ever had. When you visit the scene of such outrages and order the plants thrown out and replaced by those you like, you will later find the despised plants tucked away in odd places. You will further notice that your favorites do not thrive. They become sickly soon after planting and as they die the places of the departed are taken by some of the same despicable lot you ordered out. The gardener explains he had to have something to fill up with and these old plants "do so well." After several futile attempts to control you give up in despair and back comes the gardener's life-long pets. "Shall I not take mine ease in mine own house;" and have mine own way in mine own garden? Nay, nay, Pauline. Not so.

California's Contribution to an Age-Old Industry.

BY ROBERT W. HODGSON.

LIKE the fig, grape and pomegranate, the olive was among the fruits introduced into California by the Franciscan friars as they pushed their missionary conquests northward from Lower California into California proper. And, strange to say, so successful were these hardy pioneers in the selection of suitable varieties of all of these fruits that at the present time the so-called Mission pomegranate, Mission fig, Mission grape, and Mission olive are among our most widely planted varieties of the fruits in question. Two of these in particular have proven so admirably adapted to California conditions that it is doubtful whether they will ever be displaced by new or improved sorts.

Like the fig and the pomegranate, the olive is among the most drought resistant of fruits. Indeed specimens of all these fruits are still to be found growing about the old Mission grounds, although in the vicissitudes through which the Missions passed in the early history of California, for many years they received little or no care.

Noticing the remarkable hardiness of the olive and its ability to live and thrive under most adverse conditions, the early California agriculturist was led to believe that the olive was a waste land proposition, and not worthy of good cultural treatment. This idea persisted for years and to its prevalence may be traced a great part of the disaster and failure which attended the early efforts to grow olives on a commercial scale. Not only was it generally considered that the olive was adapted to dry farming on relatively poor soils, but many even came to consider that the tree actually demanded poor soils, thriving better under such conditions than when properly attended to.

Olives ripening on the tree.

Sylmar olive grove, San Fernando Valley, reputed to be largest in world.

While it is true that the tree itself will live and grow slowly under such conditions the amount and quality of the fruit depends very largely upon the presence of an adequate and sufficient supply of moisture in the soil, a lesson only learned by later day growers after twenty years of dismal failure and bitter experience.

The mission padres grew the olive almost entirely for the manufacture of oil. Therefore size of fruit did not especially concern them, although we have more recently learned that the best grade of oil comes from the best quality of fruit. Following the example of the mission fathers, olive culture in California was founded upon the manufacture of oil. Oil making is an art which has developed in Italy and Spain during centuries past and early attempts in California usually resulted in a rather poor grade of oil. Planted in most unsuitable locations, manufacturing a poor grade of oil, in competition with cheap labor in Spain and Italy, and not provided with adequate tariff protection, olive growing in California for oil manufacture was doomed to be a failure.

And the stigma attached to failure stayed with the industry for some time. It was only some ten or fifteen years ago that olive culture climbed out of the "dumps," and since that time with more or less periodical fluctuation it has steadily picked up until at the present time it presents most favorable prospects for the man who wishes to engage in some line of horticultural effort.

RIPE OLIVE "DISCOVERED."

The green processed foreign olive had been known for years but never had appealed to the California olive grower. About the year 1900 a great discovery was made—one upon which is based the whole success of the rapidly expanding olive industry in California. And that discovery was the California ripe olive.

There is just as much difference between a ripe processed olive and the imported green "pickle" as there is between a green June apple and a ripe luscious Arkansas Beauty. The ripe article is, next to the avocado, the highest in food value of any fruit known, while the green product cannot be said to be more than a relish. The California ripe olive containing approximately 20 per cent. fat and in addition highly palatable, is destined to become a staple food all over the world. Naturally, the introduction of the ripe olive in eastern markets was a slow process. Accustomed to a green olive, many were suspicious that the black fruit was over-ripe or spoiled. But once tasted it always made a friend. To Mrs. Ehmann, founder of the famous Ehmann Olive Company of Oroville, is due much of the credit for advertising the new product in the East. Mrs. Ehmann early became convinced of the possibilities of the California ripe olive and started a processing plant in some wash tubs on her back porch. She made a number of trips East, taking with her large quantities of her processed fruit, which she distributed as samples. Today her large plant at Oroville covers many acres and ships olives to all parts of the world.

Typical modern olive grove.

A fine row of old Mission olive trees planted from cuttings secured at the San Diego Mission.

Soon came the discovery that the ripe processed olive could be canned just like other fruits and with this discovery dates the beginning of the big olive boom which started about ten years ago and which has lasted practically up to the present time. The manufacturer of olive oil, although it has progressed until California olive oil is as good as any, became merely a side line to take care of a by-product, and the processed fruit became the main line. Naturally all the emphasis came to be placed upon size and quality and every effort was bent to increase both of these desirable characteristics. Irrigation, intensive cultivation, pruning and fertilization became topics of heated discussion and debate and have continued so until the present time.

The old Mission olive has continued a popular favorite, being generally considered the best all-round utility olive. It processes very well, runs high in oil and stands up well after processing. The tree is a good grower, bears well, and the fruit makes a good grade of oil. The Manzanillo, a Spanish introduction of a much later date, ranks second and is well liked by many on account of its early bearing habit and heavy yielding qualities. It is somewhat earlier than the Mission, thus running less danger of frost injury, but is not so successfully processed nor does it stand up so well after processing. Moreover the habit of growth is not so good. In the search for larger sorts, the Ascolano and Sicilano have been planted somewhat, but are not so popular on account of the difficulties in successfully processing them.

WAR'S EFFECT UPON INDUSTRY.

War conditions have had a marked influence on the olive industry. Oil making has at best made a very small margin of profit in California in the past, but with the tying up of tonnage during the war, European olive oil practically went out of the market. California olive oil became very profitable, more than doubling in price, and oil olives went from $20 to $30 a ton to $90 offered for this season's crop. While oil has been profitable during the past two or three years, the future is by no means sure. When the embargo is raised on Spanish oil and tonnage becomes available, it is quite likely that the United States will be deluged with imported oil, to the market detriment of prices on our own product.

The same situation holds true with the "Greek" or salt cured olive, a product practically forced on the California packer on account of a demand which could not be satisfied due to existing war conditions.

Prices this year have been higher than ever, as high as $350 a ton being paid for large Sevillanos and $250 to $300 for "jumbo" Missions. Altough the crop is below normal, sizes are much larger than usual, and the receipts will not be far from normal.

The olive grower with a good orchard will make good money this year. With a ton to a ton and a half to the acre, even though labor prices have gone up, he will make a reasonable profit on his investment. And when a normal crop comes again (and sooner or later it must if prices keep up) big money should be made, as it is quite possible to average two and a half to three tons to the acre.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

The Farmer Made Good.

THE tremendous figures of farm production in the United States during 1918 express in statistical form the glorious contribution of American agriculture to the winning of the war. The annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture might be truly said to be a statement of the American farmer's war record. Never before in the history of the country, or of the world, for that matter, have mere statistics been so eloquent.

When the historians write of the mighty deeds of generals and armies it is to be hoped that they will record also that in 1918, the year of America's earnest and effective entry into the battle against the modern Huns, the farmers of the United States planted 289,000,000 acres to cereals, potatoes and cotton and produced 19,495,000,000 pounds of beef, pork and mutton. Millions of men have died in the past five years to make the world safe for democracy, but these men might have died in vain but for the gigantic responsibility assumed and successfully carried out in 1918 by the food producers of America.

The achievement of the agriculturists in providing the food so indispensable to the maintenance of physical vigor and fighting morale in the nations united against the Prussian aggressor can be appreciated only by taking into consideration the conditions under which the farmers were compelled to operate. To have increased the crop yields under strictly normal conditions would have been an accomplishment worthy of note. The farmers of America, however, were not only called upon to produce more than ever before, but were asked to do it in the face of a labor shortage, high production costs and an all-around combination of unfavorable circumstances such as they had never before been called upon to confront. This is what makes their achievement so truly remarkable.

Doing more work and cultivating more acres with less men, the farmers of the nation produced this year 5,638,077,000 bushels of cereals as compared with 4,883,819,000 bushels as an annual average for the five-year period 1910-1914. The 1918 production of beef, estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at 8,500,000,000 pounds, compares with 7,384,007,000 pounds in 1917. A total of 10,500,000,000 pounds of pork was produced this year as against 8,450,148,000 pounds last year. The production of mutton and goat meat increased from 491,205,000 pounds to 495,000,000 pounds. Handicapped as they were, the dairy farmers were able to contribute 8,429,000,000 gallons of milk to the food supply, or 141,000,000 gallons more than last year. The wool growers furnished 299,921,000 pounds of wool, compared with 281,892,000 pounds in 1917. The poultry industry, "shot to pieces" as it was by almost ruinously high feed costs, nevertheless yielded 1,921,000,000 dozens of eggs as against some 37,000,000 dozens less than that in 1917. Likewise the poultrymen produced 589,000,000 fowls as compared with 578,000,000 last year.

Read these figures, Mr. Farmer, and you, Mr. City Man, whose patriotically-planted and carefully-tended garden and poultry-yard helped piece out the great food total and release grain and meat for shipment abroad. America is proud of them and of you who made possible the production which they record. As figures, of course, they can only be approximately correct, but they are based on the most careful investigations and tabulations by the official government agencies and must be accepted as being the closest estimates possible to make. They tell the story and it is such a story as mere figures have never told before. Along with the mighty and valorous deeds of those who bore arms for their country in the momentous year now ending must be recorded the tremendous achievements of the soldiers of the soil who labored and triumphed against trying obstacles on the home front.

Support the Bureau.

ONE dollar a year is a small fee indeed to pay toward the support of an institution which is doing as much good in the field of agriculture as the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, but that is all that the farmers of the county are asked to contribute. An effort is being made at this time to increase the membership of the bureau to 3000. It ought to be 5000, and if the farmers who have earnestly supported the project in the past year will each do his best to interest others in the work such a membership can be realized and maintained. There are many city folk who go in for gardening and poultry raising who could well afford to contribute dollars for the support of such an institution and who could get enough benefit through consultation with the bureau experts to repay themselves many times for so small an outlay.

The farm-bureau movement throughout the United States proved to be an excellent thing as a war measure for furthering and increasing agricultural production. In many parts of the country, including many of the counties of California, the farm bureau has also played such a useful part in encouraging and informing the farmers that its maintenance on a permanent peace basis seems to be amply justified. The farmers of the land are beginning to realize as never before that there is something, after all, in getting together like the men in other industries, and the farm center has served admirably as a means to this end. Furthermore, the farmers have come to see the advantage of having access to expert advice along the lines of farming methods without having to depend upon long-distance correspondence with the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington or agricultural colleges hundreds of miles away. The farm-bureau organization gives them this kind of service right at home and backs it up with practical demonstrations that bring results.

The future usefulness of the Los Angeles Farm Bureau depends in large measure upon the support it receives now. And the more liberal that support the more effective will be the service the organization will be able to render the farmers of the county.

THE PURE-BRED HERD SIRE AS A FACTOR IN DAIRY PROFITS.

BY GILLETTE E. GORDON.

THERE are three important factors that determine the production of dairy cows. They are feed, care and breeding. All should receive close attention. Although we may supply the best of feed and care, yet the maximum production of milk is impossible if the individual is lacking in feeding capacity, dairy conformation and temperament. These qualities are the result of intelligent breeding for this purpose and may be obtained through the use of good pure-bred dairy bulls.

The more extensive use of pure-bred bulls is the greatest need of the dairy industry in Southern California at the present time. There is no factor in dairy management that will so greatly and permanently improve dairy conditions as intelligent breeding. Too many farmers still have faith in the old scrub bull in spite of the fact that he is costing the dairy industry so much by producing "boarder" cows.

There are plenty of data, gotten together by different experiment stations, showing the improvement in production of herds due to the use of good pure-bred sires. In many cases this increase reaches over 100 pounds of butter fat per year, in the first generation. The data also show that the use of inferior bulls lowers the production of the daughters below that of their dams as much as twenty-five pounds of butter fat or more per year in some cases.

The Jersey bull, Gorgeous Boy, used on the herd owned by the Purdue Experiment Station at Lafayette, Ind., illustrates the point. Seven of his daughters made an average annual production of 6592 pounds of milk and 392 pounds of butter fat during their first three lactation periods. This was an increase of 1828 pounds of milk and 102 pounds of butter fat per cow per year over the production of their dams during similar lactation periods. This bull cost $100 when a calf, but the increased production from one daughter in four years time was enough to more than pay his original cost. The buying of this bull is therefore easily seen to have been a good investment.

INFLUENCE UNDERESTIMATED.

The value of the influence of a good dairy bull is not generally realized by the majority of farmers. There seems to exist a strange and disproportioned sense of judgment in many minds concerning the value of an efficient pure-bred sire as compared with horses, machinery and other equipment about the farm. A farmer will pay $200 for a horse when he knows the value of the animal will continue for only a few years. He will pay from $125 up for a harvester or other farm implement which, while most necessary, is used only ten or fifteen days in the year. Yet, when asked to pay from $100 to $150 for a good pure-bred dairy bull, whose influence will be felt for many years after the bull is dead and gone, he is often seized with a depreciatory judgment that is very inconsistent. It is a well recognized fact that men's success in business depends largely on their judgment of the value of property.

Let us take up a few figures in order that we may better see the relative value of the dairy sire. The following figures show the relation of the cost and influence of a good pure-bred sire as compared with that of thirty grade cows on which he may be used.

	Cost.	Influence.
Cost of good pure bred sire.....	$ 200	50 per cent.
Cost of thirty grade cows at $100	2000	50 per cent.
Total investment	3200	100 per cent.

One can see that the bull's cost is only one-sixteenth (a little over 6 per cent.) of the total investment and yet his influence on the future herd is fully as much as the other fifteen-sixtenths (94 per cent.) of the investment. This shows of how much importance is the investment in a good pure-bred dairy bull. From a strictly business standpoint a farmer cannot afford to use a scrub bull. Granting that the scrub bull does not lower the production of his daughters below that of their dams (and we rarely find a scrub bull that does that well) we would lose all the profit that would be possible had a good sire been used. Aside from that, we must consider the value on the market of the offspring.

Keeping a scrub bull is not only a losing proposition so far as production goes, but the owner will lose the price of a good bull many times over each year in the market value of the offspring. The dairy farmer could not afford to use a scrub bull even if the animal were given to him and he were paid to use him.

A CASE IN POINT.

Following is an account, taken from Kimball's Dairy Farmer, of an experiment undertaken by Prof. Larsen of the South Dakota Experiment Station to prove the efficiency of a good dairy sire in building up the herd: (Pure-bred Holstein bulls were used.)

In the first series cow No. 197, a cow of the variety found in many of our "dairy" herds, made a record of only 3286.5 pounds of milk, 139.5 pounds of butter fat. Cow No 191, her daughter, sired by a pure-bred Holstein bull. She made a record of 6129 pounds of milk and 228.7 pounds of butter fat, an improvement over her dam of 2842.5 pounds of milk, 89.2 pounds of butter fat. The improvement in milk production was 86.5 per cent. and in butter fat, 64 per cent. Cow No. 183 was sired by a pure-bred Holstein bull and out of cow No. 191. Her production record was 10,033 pounds of milk and 304.3 pounds of butter fat. This was an improvement over her dam of 3904 pounds of milk and 75.5 pounds of butter fat and an improvement over her grand dam, the common cow, of 6746.5 pounds of milk and 164.7 pounds of butter fat.

In this instance the grand-daughter showed an improvement in producing ability over her nondescript grand dam to the extent that she produced 205 per cent more milk and over 110 per cent. more butter fat.

The second series is similar to the first, and shows the effect in production made by the use of good, pure-bred bulls in only two generations. Cow No. 196 was indifferent, to say the least. The best that she could be persuaded to produce was 4125 pounds of milk and 174 pounds of butter fat. Her daughter, cow No. 192, produced 8927 pounds of milk and 307 pounds of butter fat. The increase, in this case, was 4802 pounds of milk and 133 pounds of butter fat and the percentage of increase was 116 in milk and 76 in butter fat.

The next generation, cow No. 184, produced 10,194 pounds of milk and 374 pounds of butter fat. The improvement in production that the grand-daughter shows over her mediocre grand dam amounts to 6069 pounds of milk and 200 pounds of butter fat, or 147 per cent. in milk and 115 per cent.

These two instances furnish striking examples of the advisability and practicability of building up dairy herds by breeding. The original cows in both cases were of promiscuous breeding. It was only reasonable to expect that a dairy sire of pure blood should assert himself and produce progeny that would show the effect of many generations of persistent, intelligent breeding for milk and butter-fat production. Midwinter Breeders' Show.

The fourteenth annual show of the Poutry Breeders' Association will be held January 8 to 14, entries closing January 3. This show, which has been a fixture in poultry circles fo rmore than a decade, has been aptly named "The Madison Square of the Pacific." Not only will this show cater to poultry, but the annual show of the Rabbit and Pet Stock Association of Southern California will be cooped in conjunction with it and will be made a feature which is bound to attract considerable attention.

The Coney Fur Club will have a display and demonstration of fur rabbits, rabbit fur and fur garments, showing the process of tanning and making into the finished product the fur of the rabbit.

It is expected that over 2000 specimens of poultry and rabbits will be cooped, as the association has been more liberal in offering cash prizes and gold specials this year than in any previous year.

The United States government will have a display fostering back yard poultry raising and the Los Angeles Public Library will have a booth in which the public will be given a list of publications on file and in the shelves of the library devoted to poultry and rabbit culture.

The show room will be at No. 229 South Broadway and will be open each day from 10 o'clock a.m. to 10 o'clock p.m.

Farm management ranks with farm "savvy" as a factor in farm success.

Farm News of the Great Southwest.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

POMONA.—A study which is of vital interest to citrus growers throughout Southern California has been instituted here by the United States Weather Bureau in connection with its work along the line of frost protection. It is already known that the heat radiation from the earth plays a very important part in frost damage. There have been shipped to this section within the past few days a delicate set of instruments for measuring this heat radiation under various conditions. It is said that there are only a few of these instruments in existence.

With a definite knowledge of the heat radiation and its effects under varied conditions, the department will have in hand valuable information for use in forecasting temperatures. The work here is in charge of F. B. Young. During the past few days seventeen shelter stations containing instruments for reading the temperature have been scattered about the groves in this district.

The data collected here by the government will later be compiled and used in connection with information to be given out by the government on orchard heating. It is also announced that as a result of work done here a year ago the government is now able to give the Pomona Valley section the benefit of temperature predictions. These are to start at once. Through special arrangements with the Pomona Valley Fruit Growers' Exchange these figures will be available to the growers every night, so that they will know whether to expect dangerous weather in this particular locality.

WANTS LAWS CHANGED.

VISALIA.—C. F. Collins, the Horticultural Commissioner for this county, states several changes in laws relating to the administration of this work in California will be asked of the coming State Legislature. The text of the bill covering these points is now being compiled by Mr. Collins. Among the changes to be requested are: A law placing the appointment of the county officials in the hands of the State Commissioner of Horticulture; regulations providing for standard apple and small fruit containers; more definite authority for destruction of condemned fruit; prohibition of the drying of green apples. It is probable larger appropriations will be also asked for extension of investigational work.

CITRUS RETURNS GOOD.

PORTERVILLE.—Records from the railroads show that there have been shipped from the immediate Porterville district 537 cars of oranges, with a few scattering cars still to go. The estimated total for the season is 550 cars, or about fifty cars in excess of last season. In view of the exceptional prices that have been received this year, some of the earlier shipments going as high as $9 per box, f.o.b., the total value of the crop to the growers will be around $1,425,000, as compared with about $700,000 for last season. In fact, in point of gross returns, despite the short crop, this year will probably prove to be one of the most profitable in the history of the industry.

Contrary to the generally-accepted belief the soil and climate of this portion of California are well adapted to the culture of celery, according to George Ege, a rancher of this section, who has made a most profitable experiment with the crop this year. Ege has an acre of celery on which there are 17,000 plants. Of these, he says, 12,000 will grade fancy, for which he has been receiving $1 per dozen, delivered at Porterville. At this rate the gross income from the one acre of the crop would run over $1200. The labor expense, he says, will not exceed $300, leaving a net profit of $900.

PIGGY SMELL OFFENDS.

BANNING.—Some months ago the Banning City Council enlarged the limits within the city where hogs might be legally raised. This was done as a war measure and was along the line of endeavor encouraged by the United States Food Administration. The Council followed the example of many other municipal bodies, in permitting the hog-raising zone to be enlarged, and some very fat porkers resulted from the passing of the ordinance.

But there was sure to be a kick-back in the way of a smell from the hog pens. The odor is not exactly the same as that of the orange blossom and does not affect the olfactory nerve with the pleasing fragrance of the wild rose. The result was that there was objection to keeping hogs singly and in groups in the enlarged district. The city trustees responded at once to a hurry-up call to abate the objectionable smell and an ordinance was introduced which seeks to abolish the piggy odor from the enlarged district forevermore.

The war is over and the Kaiser is down and out. No further need for the pig ordinance appears necessary to the naked eye at this time, say the sensitive people of Banning.

PERSIMMONS YIELD WELL.

MONROVIA. — Persimmon growing is proving profitable in this section. A. B. Williams, who has several acres planted to improved Japanese varieties, has this year harvested better than a ton of fruit to the acre on 4-year-old trees. Prices have been excellent, running from 5 to 8 cents a pound. The eastern persimmon is a slow growing tree, but the new lotus stock makes the Japanese persimmon grow as fast as a peach tree. The trees were so heavily loaded that some breaking occurred and propping had to be resorted to.

FINE FRUIT GOES EAST.

REDLANDS.—A total of 114 cars of the choicest oranges were shipped from the Redlands district to the East for the holiday trade and it is confidently expected that these cars of oranges will sell for around $200,000, bringing the growers of the fruit probably $125,000 to $150,000. Packers of the district say that they never shipped finer fruit than went out for the Christmas trade. The skin was smooth, the color was good and the fruit was going way over the "8 to 1" test. No special effort was made to pick fruit for the Christmas trade this year because of shipping facilities being poor, making it necessary to cut the pool five days short, and because of labor being high. An average of $3.50 a day was paid to the pickers used in getting the fruit from the trees for the pool. Growers do not believe that such a high price will prevail through the season, but it was necessary to pay this during the time when fruit had to be selected, making the work of the picker hard.

GOOD BUTTERFAT RECORD.

TULARE.—Irene's Cadora, a registered Jersey heifer, owned by A. A. Jenkins, produced 804 pounds of butterfat from 13,485.4 pounds of milk for the year ending November 28, according to an attested record. She is the first Tulare county cow of any breed to exceed the 800-pound mark. The net value of her milk was more than $450 for the year. This cow's granddam was Jacoba Irene, for several years the world's champion Jersey.

Total payments for butter fat made by creameries of this district to dairymen reached $157,942 for deliveries during the month of November. This represents the value of 214,529 pounds of fat, paid for on a basis of 72 cents for cream and 80 for the fat delivered in whole milk. The total for the month was about $9000 less than for the month prior, accounted for both on the basis of the smaller production and the slightly reduced price.

The Evolution of Irrigation
Just as the open irrigation ditch was superseded first by wooden, and then by concrete flumes, so were the latter in turn forced to give way to the "K-T SYSTEM" of underground conduits, equipped with gates and valves. This provides for a perfect distribution of the water at the exact spot required, and at just the time it is needed. It also eliminates the constant losses resulting from evaporation, seepage and ditches choked with weeds—wasting time, water, land and money.

TWENTY-FIRST SHOW, LOS ANGELES ASSOCIATION. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

THE twenty-first annual show of the Los Angeles Poultry Association was not the largest that has been held in its history nor did it represent so complete a variety of breeds as some previous fixtures, but bird for bird, it was a superb effort from the viewpoint of quality. And that, after all, is the goal that poultry fanciers and breeders should strive for. Excellence is what counts; it is the hallmark to successful poultry culture. The management is to be congratulated in being able to assemble a thousand specimens, every-one of which was a credit to the fancy and the practical side of the business.

As in previous years, the old, reliable Barred Rocks constituted the strongest class, the grand total going into three figures. The first cock, hen, cockerel and pullet were beyond question the finest specimens of the breed that ever graced an exhibition coop in this town. The color barring was really a work of art, while in head and leg points there was nothing to be desired. While the blue ribbon birds commanded wide attention, the second and third awards were in every way superior specimens. Particularly was this true of the second cock bird, hen, cockerel and pullet. In this class there was also a good exhibit of pullet-bred cocks, cockerel-bred hens, pullet-bred cockerels and cockerel-bred pullets, all of which added interest to the occasion. White Rocks were a smaller class than usual, but of real merit. Buffs, a small entry with no Partridge or Columbians.

In Wyandottes there was a splendid entry from Oregon that captured nearly all the first honors, and the birds were "up" in all the good points that stand for beauty and utility in this popular variety. The number was rather small, there being less than half a dozen exhibitors represented in the class.

As usual, Single Comb Rhode Island Reds came up strong, with birds from Utah, Arizona and all portions of California. In this connection it is pleasant to note that the California birds were in the blue, clearly indicating that our California poultrymen understand this breed quite well. Rose Combs were a small class while the Rhode Island Whites elicited considerable attention on account of their novelty.

As has already been predicted in these columns, the Light Brahma is coming into its own. The entry was not overlarge, but showed some really fine specimens. Langshans were a small class not so strong as in former shows.

The competition in Leghorns was not only interesting but well defined. The birds were all well groomed and in splendid condition; the winners being of good type, fine markings, alert and sprightly. No breed nor variety is anywhere near so popular as the White Leghorn, and for this reason one would suppose that it would be the largest class in the show.

Black Minorcas were a strong class, all of which were of quality and good Minorca type. One entry came from as far east as New Jersey, and though sharing in the honors, there were, nevertheless, some blue ribbons for California Minorca people. The Buffs were a small class, the winning specimen showing improvement in all sections. This is a comparatively new variety still largely in the making.

Blue Andalusians, not strong in numbers, were of good average merit.

One of the largest classes covered the Anconas, a breed that has shown excellent wearing quality, and a constantly increasing patronage. The largest entry was by a Los Angeles fancier, who also captured the largest number of prizes. In fancy and economic values, Anconas are not without first-class merit. The blue ribbon birds were well furnished, of good type and texture, and well groomed.

Buff Orpingtons were decidedly in the lead, the Blacks and Whites being much less in numbers. When bred to standard requirements, the Buff Orpington is a lordly bird, majestic in appearance and handsome to look at. The winners were worthy of the race. Partridge Orpingtons are essentially a California creation, hence on patriotic grounds should be more in evidence.

The display of Dark Cornish was beyond question the best that has ever been cooped in this town. As a meat breed, Cornish easily occupy first place, and since California is shy on good table fowl, we predict a prosperous future for the breed. The birds possessed the broad back, the heavy breast, width between the legs, and the hard feathering that really individualizes the breed.

Water fowl, a rather small display, consisting principally of Indian Runner, Rouen and Muscovy ducks; geese limited to one breed, the Toulouse.

Bronze turkeys, a real treat, all birds showing quality of a high order—indeed, among the best we have ever seen in California.

The display of bantams, covering all varieties, was interesting to a degree, and quality of the best. The bantam fancy is a strong factor with many people and always proves alluring in the show rooms.

The Show Room Atmosphere.

Breeders report good sales at this show and a growing interest in pure-blooded fowl. A number of birds changed hands at long prices, the chief sale being on Black Minorcas, where some twenty-five specimens brought not far from $2000. These are for exhibition purposes in some of the leading Eastern shows. Single birds at from $50 to $150 each are also a matter of record, while refusals for winning specimens at these figures are not uncommon. Orders for hatching eggs, day-old-chicks, young pullets, breeding and foundation stock were a pronounced feature at this show; all of which indicates that the poultry industry is recovering from the period of depression that prevailed during the war.

LARGE SUGAR BEET ACREAGE NOW BELIEVED TO BE ASSURED.

UNDER the stimulus of a more favorable contract than has heretofore been offered, farmers of the Southwest are planting or preparing to plant a large acreage of sugar beets. Many growers who forsook beet growing during the past two years because of attractive prices in other lines of agricultural endeavor are returning to the fold. Now that it is practically assured that the price of sugar will not fall within the next year the growers feel that they will be planting with the assurance of good returns. Thousands of acres in the San Fernando and Pomona Valleys and in Orange county, which were given over to the disappointing tepary or blackeye beans, are being plowed for sugar beets. Many farmers who planted their lands to alfalfa or limas when the price for beets was unsatisfactory will cling to these crops, but it is believed certain the largest acreage in the history of the industry in the Southwest will be planted to sugar beets.

The men who follow the plow in the beet fields say that this is the first year the growers have been offered a "fair" price for sugar beets, and they do not look for a reduction in the price of sugar beets for some years to come. They insist that the price per ton has been too low, considering the cost of land, water, cultivation and seed, in proportion to other crops. The growers assert that the Food Administration has interceded for them with the result that the refiners have compiled and offered the favorable contract.

For the first time in the history of the industry the price is stabilized, and the profits of the refiners are more or less of a fixed quantity. The price paid for beets depends upon not only the sugar content, but on the net price received by the refiners for the sugar, the latter being the new factor in the situation.

The present "seaport" price of sugar is 9 cents per pound. The average 1917 sugar content of beets grown in Southern California, according to the 1918 report of the Bureau of Crop Estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, was 18.5 per cent. On the basis of this for an estimate the average price to be received per ton, at the present price of sugar, would be $14.40. The average yield per acre of sugar beets last year again quoted the Federal statistics was 10.7 tons. Therefore the average acre return, always providing the present price of sugar is maintained, would be $154.

Sugar companies report a large number of growers signing the contract and calling for seed, and the crop-growing machine for 1919 is well in motion.

The new contract, which covers the twelve months following July 1, 1919, specifies that growers must purchase their seed from the company at 30 cents per pound. Officials of the Anaheim Beet Sugar Company state that all companies have a sufficient supply of seed on hand. Most of this came from Europe, but some of it was grown in Western States, California, Idaho and Utah together producing 2,458,000 pounds of seed last year. To plant the 1917 California crop 16,320,000 pounds of seed was required. Before the world war halted agricultural production in Europe, America was entirely dependent upon Germany, Belgium and Russia for sugar-beet seed. Henceforth, it is believed, the United States will produce more and more of its own seed. The cost of seed growing depends largely on the outlay for experimental work conducted by the chemist who samples the beets, tests the sugar content of the samples and replants the beets containing the highest sugar content for seed.

The area in sugar beets in 1917 in the Golden State was 154,000 acres, as compared with 141,097 in 1916 and 122,737 in 1915. It is estimated that but 139,000 acres were grown in 1918. There are fourteen sugar factories in the State. One, that of the American Sugar Company at Chino, has not operated for the past two years, but will reopen for the coming season, as between 10,000 and 12,000 acres in that district are being prepared for beets. The largest beet acreage in Southern California is around Oxnard, where 18,000 acres are being seeded.

CUP FOR TOMATOES.

ESCONDIDO.—A silver loving cup and $75 in cash, offered as a prize by the Escondido Canning Company for the largest tomato tonnage per acre the past season, was won by D. C. Jenkins, who produced 34.93 tons on two acres of land, or 17.088 tons per acre. Sidney High of Escondido, with 2.125 acres, was second with a production of 33.25 tons, or 15.64 tons per acre. D. Griswold of Valley Center, with ten acres, produced 154.07 tons, or 15.41 tons per acre. During the season the growers of the district received about $30,000 for the tomato product, the canning company having paid out a like sum for labor.

PROPER IRRIGATION KILLS RED SPIDER.

Three citrus orchards in Los Angeles county were found seriously infected with red spider by the county farm advisers during the last few weeks. Deficient soil moisture at a time when a dry north wind blew was given as the cause of the spread of this pest.

It is believed that an orchard will support a certain population of red spider, but adequate and frequent irrigation must be accomplished during the fall

FARM HAND WANTS WORK

Use the mechanical farm hand—LAY Porta Power

When connected to your automobile it Pumps Water, Grinds Feed, Hoists Hay, Runs Thresher, Saws Wood, Mixes Cement, Bales Hay, and Runs Milker.

Runs Every Belted Implement about your Farm and Orchard

IF THE FARMER or orchardist has labor enough, he can make big profits. For several years prices for farm produce are bound to stay so high that any method for doing the farm work more easily should not be neglected by the farmer and fruit grower. Therefore you who have a farm or orchard should learn more about a remarkable implement which instantly turns your automobile into a money-making farm hand. Now used by thousands of enthusiastic farmers.

This implement, called LAY Porta Power, is applied to the rear tires, where the greatest power of the automobile is delivered. It is easier on the engine and the tires than the smoothest boulevard driving, and yet it will deliver (at the belt) from 5 to 8 H. P. for any machine. No tire wear—perfect rolling contact.

LAY Porta Power

The wonderful thing about LAY Porta Power is the fact that it can be placed on the running board and quickly taken anywhere on the farm, to distant wood lots, orchards or irrigation tracts, or anywhere else where your auto can go. In less than three minutes it can be applied to your car and ready to deliver power, and when the work is over, it can be instantly detached and you can drive off. A stationary engine will cost you $150 to $300 more than this modest priced implement, and it cannot begin to make you the money that LAY Porta Power can. LAY Porta Power takes the engine to the job, not the job to the engine.

With all crops fetching big money, LAY Porta Power will bring you hundreds of extra dollars each season. Thousands of farmers say it is doing this for them.

Out of thousands of power implements sold by us, only four have ever been returned for any cause whatsoever!

The Pure Bred Sire.

further breeding is pursued along this line, the greater will be the percentage of true dairy blood in the resulting progeny, and the less will be the liability of reversion to the faults of scrub ancestors. The benefits are cumulative in that each succeeding generation is not only better dairy stock, but also provides a better foundation for the generations that are to follow.

The one sure, economical and profitable method of getting a good dairy cow is through intelligent breeding.

THE SAFE SIDE.

When the dairyman realizes the value of the dairy bull's influence on the herd, he understands the importance in the selection of a good sire. The dairy cattle of today have been developed from native cows that gave only enough milk for their young. The ability to give large quantities of milk is an acquired characteristic developed through many generations of breeding, and there is always a tendency for the production to revert back to that of the native cow, although this tendency is not nearly so strong among pure breds as it is among cattle of mixed breeding. A bull whose ancestors have been bred for many generations for one purpose is much more certain to transmit these desirable characteristics than one whose ancestry is mixed. It can readily be seen, then, that in selecting a herd sire it is of the utmost importance that he have high producing ancestry back of him. It should also be remembered that the influence of the ancestors in the first and second generations is of much greater importance than that of the animals in the third and fourth generations, and too much emphasis should not be placed on a particular animal several generations back. In buying a herd sire, one should insist on seeing the production records of his ancestors as merely the name and registration number is no guarantee that the bull will sire high producing daughters.

When considering records of production it is well to understand that those made under the supervision of breed associations, which are called the register of merit, by the Jersey, and the advanced register by the Holstein-Friesian, Guernsey and Ayrshire associations, are more reliable than those of cow testing associations or private records. Cow testing records are practically as accurate as official records, but are not as carefully supervised and are not accepted by the breed associations. Private records are of value as far as the breeder's integrity goes, which is a point to be determined by the buyer. There is no doubt among breeders, but that the long distance records are the real measure of a cow's ability and more emphasis should be placed on records of one year or for a lactation period than on short time records.

There is more certainty in selecting a tested bull, that is, one whose daughters have production records, than in buying a young, untested bull. This is a more expensive method than buying a young bull and taking a chance on what he will produce. In the latter case the young bull should be obtained while the old sire is still in use and given a trial to see what his daughters will produce when put on yearly test, before the old herd sire is disposed of.

Although it is essential that the bull have good production behind him, it is also essential that the be a good individual. He should possess indications of a good strong constitution, good dairy conformation, capacity, dairy temperament and breed type. If he has any offspring, see if he transmits these qualities to them, which is an index as to his prepotency. If he has no offspring, look at his sire and dam and be sure that he has these good qualities back of him.

APPEARANCE TELLS.

Be sure that the herd sire has masculinity, which is evidenced by a strong head, muscular neck and high crest; constitution, which is indicated by a bright eye, large open nostril, good heart girth, and width and depth of chest; feeding capacity, evidenced by a long deep middle; dairy tempermanent, indicated by the spacing of the vertebrae, the set of the shoulder and the ribs, and tendency away from beefiness; conformation, showing a good topline, long, wide and level rump, and well set legs. The indications of the mammary system as shown by the position and placing of the rudimentary teats, milk veins and milk wells, is also an important index to the development of the mammary system of the future generations.

The individuality and production records of the bull's dam should receive a great deal of attention. It is generally believed that his dam has more influence on his daughters than does his sire. Whatever may be the case, it is important that she be a good producer, and show the other characteristics mentioned that would make her a good individual. The butter-fat record of the dam and grand dam should be at least 100 pounds greater than the average of the herd on which he is to be used.

The sire should next be considered, and he can be judged by the qualities of his ancestors unless he is old enough to have tested daughters, which are the best indications of his actual breeding value. It is a good recommendation, if he can transmit to his daughters what he has inherited from his ancestors.

BULL ASSOCIATIONS.

In several of the Eastern and Middle Western States, co-operative bull associations have been organized. This movement has attracted much attention and gives promise of growing.

The plan followed is for several small groups of farmers to get together and buy a good bull for each group. At the end of about two years the bull from group number one is moved on to group number two and so on, thus preventing inbreeding. In this way excellent bulls can be obtained at a small cost to each farmer, and by changing them it is not necessary to buy new ones for a number of years, thus reducing the cost materially.

Until breeders and dairymen realize the importance of the influence of the pure-bred sire, it will be impossible to bring the dairy industry up to the standard which should be maintained in California.

ROOTS SUPPLY SUCCULENCE.

The chief function of roots in cattle feeding is to supply a succulent feed. Of the different root crops, mangel-wurzels furnish the greatest yield per acre. Other kinds of beets and turnips and carrots may be used. Turnips, however, should be fed after milking rather than before, as they cause a bad flavor in the products if fed immediately before milking. Carrots impart a desirable color to the milk.

EMERGENCY TRACTOR TRAINING COURSES WILL COVER STATE.

UNDER the auspices of the State Board of Education and high schools of the various agricultural districts of the State, emergency tractor training classes are being held in furtherance of the campaign to increase the food supply. All men and boys over 16 may enroll, the registration fee, $2.50, being the only charge for the three-weeks' course.

Influenza has somewhat interfered with the schedule of classes, but it is believed that by summer, all the important agricultural districts will have been visited. Four California makes of tractors are being used, these being loaned by the agents in the territory visited.

During the first week the theory and principle of the gas engine is being studied. The second week is given over to assembling and disassembling tractors, their operation and repair. The third week sees students operating tractors in the field.

In organizing classes, preference is given to farmers and farm employees.

The course was scheduled for the Ventura High School, beginning December 14. Then Riverside, Perris Valley, Coachella Valley and Imperial Valley will be visited. The Los Angeles high schools will co-operate in the work on May 1, when the classes are scheduled to be held at the Van Nuys High School.

TRACTOR MEN TAKE IN A WIDE FIELD.

Important developments are crowding each other in the Pacific Coast tractor trade, a condition which bespeaks great activity among tractor dealers and a roseate future for the farm power and tool trade.

E. E. Washburn and L. L. Washburn well known Pasadena automobile distributors, are the main figures in one of the new tractor trade developments which are so eloquent of the forward advance of power farming. Washburn Bros. have been appointed distributors for the Sandusky tractor for the Southern California district, embracing the counties of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Diego, San Bernardino, Kern, Imperial, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, Tulare, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, San Benito and Monterey. The announcement is made by William Raab, Pacific Coast representative of the Dauch Manufacturing Company who, with Washburn Bros., will continue to have offices at No. 126 North Los Angeles street, Los Angeles. W. V. Scott, associated with Washburn Bros., for the past year, and well known in automobile circles, is manager of the tractor department of the concern.

Convinced of the great future of the tractor industry, and following a survey of the tractor needs of this territory, the Pasadena firm, represented by Mr. Scott, made a thorough investigation of the Sandusky tractor and the Dauch Manufacturing Company. Mr. Scott and Mr. Rabb have just returned from a trip to the Sandusky factory, and were assured of big production following the lifting of the steel consumption embargo. Expert traveling representatives will be sent from the factory to give instructions and advise to agents and owners. Dealers or distributors will be appointed for each of the counties named.

NEW ORCHARD TOOL DESIGNED HERE.

A demand for a lower type of tandem disc harrow for cultivating citrus groves has resulted in the creation and manufacture by Dixon & Griswold, of Los Angeles, of a new implement devised to meet this need. The principal objection to double disc harrows has been that they were built too high and tore off too much foliage and fruit from low hanging boughs. This firm has built a tool without framework on top, but which instead is pulled directly from the center line of draft.

When the tool is in the ground very little of it projects to catch low hanging boughs. The tandem feature is declared to be exclusive on this harrow. After discing, the ground is left in a level condition, the first gang having an outhrow, the rear gang throwing in and back the dirt left in the ridges by the gront gang.

TRACTORS COMING BY THE TRAINLOAD.

The biggest shipments of tractors that have ever come into California are now speeding on their way to the Coast, according to local tractor men. One such shipment, consisting of a trainload of Fordsons, has just arrived. It is one of a series of four from the Fordson tractor factory. Over 800 tractors are included in the four trainloads which will find their way to the California ranches, according to information received by the William L. Hughson company, which is distributing the Fordson on the Pacific Coast. Further large shipments are expected during January and February.

The Fordson tractor factory, since the signing of the armistice, and with the possibility of securing a greater supply of steel, is speeding up its production day by day.

STOCK UP ON PARTS.

What is said to be one of the largest stocks of spare parts ever carried by a tractor concern has just been received by Smith Brothers, distributors of the Cleveland for Southern California, which to date has named eighteen agents in various communities. A sufficient supply of spare parts has been very often lacking in the tractor field and tractor users have been compelled to see their machines laid up pending the receipt of parts from the factory. This one feature alone had caused many a farmer to view the tractor with disfavor when he has in mind some neighbor who has suffered inconvenience. Tractor distributors are taking more and more interest in the question of supplying the repair needs of their purchasers.

SPRAY PEACH TREES.

The county farm bureau organization is urging all owners of peach orchards to spray now for blight. They are advised to use Bordeaux mixture or a lime sulphur spray, which is probably as effective as the Bordeaux. Use plenty of material, and shoot the spray in from all sides, from under and from the top down.

THE SANDUSKY TRACTOR

"THE LITTLE FELLOW WITH THE BIG PULL"

So You May Know

We have been appointed distributors of the Sandusky tractor for Southern California, succeeding the factory branch so ably conducted here by William Rabb.

It is announced by the Dauch Mfg. Co., makers of the Sandusky, that Mr. Rabb becomes the company's Pacific Coast representative. Probably there is none better known in the tractor field of Southern California than he.

Sandusky distribution was only taken over by us after a survey of the needs of this section in the tractor line and for which this type of tractor is peculiarly adapted and following a thorough investigation of the manufacturing company from the standpoint of finances, volume of sustained production and service.

This company has made tractors for ten years, is rated very high financially, has a great volume of production which insures prompt deliveries of tractors and parts while its service department is superior. With factory experts assigned to this territory and co-operating with our efficient force of field men, Sandusky users are assured advice and service second to none.

HUGE IRRIGATION PROJECT FOR LOWER SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY.

BAKERSFIELD.—Thousands of acres of barren land in Kern county are to be reclaimed and made tillable by a plan being worked out by progressive farmers here. Plans for forming a million-acre irrigation district with a water conservation project which will cost half a million dollars are being considered.

At a meeting called for the purpose at the Mountain View schoolhouse in the East Side canal district farmers and land owners discussed ways and means of constructing a dam in the Kern River canyon for the conservation of flood waters in that part of the mountains and the building of lateral canals throughout the proposed irrigation district.

The project would be financed by bonding the district and by Federal aid, such as the government has given in reclamation enterprises in Arizona, New Mexico and Northern California.

The proposed district includes not only lands of the Kern Island, Kern Delta and Mesa districts, but thousands of now barren acres in sections adjoining these.

The canals would be of cement construction and would be laid to every twenty acres of land within the districts mentioned and constructed to carry water from pumping plants which are already in the districts and which may be bought by the organization to be formed.

It is pointed out that the district may be formed by the signatures to a petition of 500 adult residents, one-fifth of whom must be property owners in the territory. Twenty per cent. of the acreage involved in the proposed district will be owned by the signers of the petition.

A government reclamation civil engineer has been over the region and has gone to Washington to prepare a map of the territory in the proposed district and with it will submit the plan of organization.

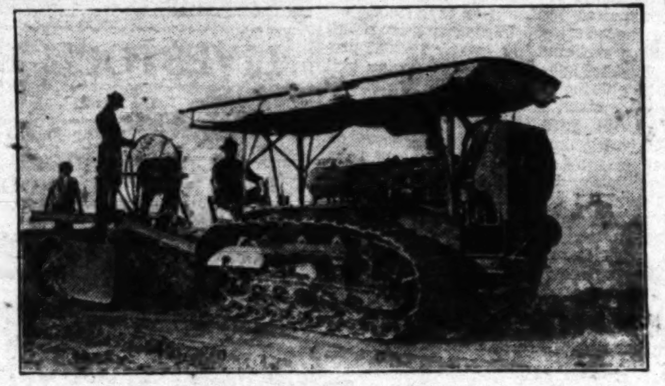
In line with the project the State Railroad Commission has under consideration a petition from the farmers of the Mountain View section asking for more water from the Kern County Land Company's canals.

Another project in connection with the proposed irrigation district is the creation of an electric power plant at the damming of the Kern Canyon stream. The electric current is to furnish electrical illumination, power and heat for the whole district, as the Owens River aqueduct is furnishing Los Angeles with electric energy.

Andrew Hancock, chairman of the Water Users Committee, presided at the meeting at which the plan was discussed, and Andrew West acted as secretary. A temporary organization was completed to go into details regarding the formation of the district. A. E. Osborn, who has been actively working on the project for some time, reports that he has collected the sum of $669.45 toward a fund to be used in organizing.

Considerable water goes to waste every year from the Kern River watershed and it is proposed to build a dam and reservoir sufficiently large enough to care for all the surplus in the most prolific years, so that when a dry season comes there will be enough water held over to furnish the district.

It is claimed that nearly a million acres of land now idle can be made productive when the project has been completed. Thousands of new settlers would thereby be drawn to Kern county and the lower end of the San Joaquin Valley would be one of the greatest agricultural centers in the State of California.



"Caterpillar" tractor and land leveler.

TRACTORS TO LEVEL WAR-SWEPT LANDS.

Ever since the day Austria fired the first shot in the world war, tales of ruin and destruction have come from the struggling nations. With the dawn of peace, destruction becomes a thing of the past; reconstruction, rebuilding is the order of the day.

One after another of our engines of war are discarded, but lovers of the soil will be glad to know that the one instrument that agriculture gave to help in the fight for liberty, the tractor, is peculiarly well fitted to play a most important part in the reconstruction period.

Giant tanks crashed their irresistible way across the battlefields, destroying all that came in their way. These fighting tanks were suggested by the great American "caterpillar" farm tractors used by the Allies for hauling their big guns. These guns contributed their share to the destruction, hurling high explosive shells without number at their objectives, destroying cities, towns and villages, blotting out bridges and roads and tearing up fields. In many places one can go for miles and scarce find a spot large enough to stand upon, that has not been churned up by explosive.

Those who have visited French farm lands report that the fields that once yielded abundant crops seem blasted beyond all hope of recovery. The pockmarks of the small shells are everywhere, and at frequent intervals are huge craters, yards across and many feet deep, where the larger shells have disappeared, for here the troops sank their mines which when fired engulfed whole companies and entirely changed the contour of the land. The fertile top soil is gone, buried beneath the upturned sterile clay and sand. Back and forth across all this devastation run endless mazes of trenches, man deep, with earthen ramparts before them, cutting up the fields until plowing or cultivating seems an utter impossibility.

Such is the condition in which returning French and Belgian farmers will find their once fertile acres. It will be a disheartening sight, for with the old horse and scraper method of leveling, it would mean years of work before the land would again be fit for cultivation.

Here is where the "caterpillar" farm tractor will drop its war charge, the heavy gun, and go to work. Hitched to a big land leveler, it will cut off the earthen ramparts, fill the trenches, craters and shell holes, and cover the leveled surface with a goodly layer of productive top soil.

The whole affair is similar to the land-leveling operations pursued by the United States Reclamation Service, where great stretches of virgin country had to be leveled accurately so that irrigation would be feasible. On the Truckee-Carson project, United States engineers decided to attack the task with tractors. They used tractors, pulling land levelers with great success.

"WALKERS" ARE USED.

Jack Ruddle, of Ruddle & Mennillo, distributors for the Fageol "Walking Tractors," reports that the government is using three tractors for practical work in the field and three Fageol motors for shop work in its California Tractor Training Centers, which started on December 2, at Delano, Kern county.

Low Down Disc Harrows
For Orchards, Vineyards, Hop Yards, Truck Farms
For Opening and Closing Irrigation Laterals
The Low-Down Orchard Disc Harrow is extremely simple in construction, and is built almost entirely of steel and malleable iron. In addition to its usefulness in orchards, vineyards, etc., it can be used for opening and closing irrigation laterals, or as an ordinary harrow in the open field.
The main frame is made of one piece of heavy bar steel formed in a rigid triangle and securely bolted to the tongue.
Each gang operated and angled independently of the other and reversible for out or in-throw.
Gangs can be tilted either way for ridging up or leveling the ground or for opening and closing irrigation laterals.
A large shield over each gang prevents injury to overhanging vines and branches.
A double leaved seat spring makes the seat safe and comfortable.
When equipped with extension frame, discs can be set out to cultivate 11 and 12-foot out-throw and in-throw with adjustment of 4 feet to and from center of harrow, making a running cut from 8 to 12 feet with the extension, and a running cut of 4 to 7 feet with regular frame. Extension frame furnished as extra.
Can be equipped with tongue truck.
Made with 8, 10 or 12 discs, 16 or 18 inches in diameter, solid or cut-out.

GOOD DEMAND AND GOOD PRICES INSURE LARGE CITRUS RETURNS.

THE orange, California's horticultural glory, with its less aristocratic relatives, the lemon and grapefruit, will, this season, bring the producers of the Golden State superlative financial returns. An insistent demand and an excellent price received for holiday fruit indicate a most prosperous year. It appears that the crop will be the third largest since outgoing cars were first counted. The quality is unexcelled.

Warm weather, aggravating the annual "June drop" in some sections caused many growers to believe, early in the season, that only half a crop would be marketed, but officials of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange now estimate that there will be a navel crop of 23,000 cars, or 65 per cent. of the best year's crop; a Valencia crop of 13,500 cars, or 95 per cent. and a lemon crop of 9500 cars, or 105 per cent.; total, 46,000 cars.

Thirty-five years ago there were shipped from California 150 cars of citrus fruit. During the season 1897-98, when the growers shipped 15,000 carloads of oranges, lemons and grapefruit from California, they believed that there were too many groves, and that overproduction would within a year or two bring disaster. But during the 1916-17 season the world markets absorbed 53,839 carloads, and cried for more. The production last season, was 35,329 cars, the smallest since 1902, on account of an unprecedented and sustained spell of warm weather, which caused setting fruits to drop, but the delivery value of the crop was $58,277,600, or nearly as much as was received for the record crop.

Picking for the Christmas market began in Southern California about the middle of November. Prices received for the fruit averaged $4.75 per box, with the demand strong. At the end of the first week in this month, approximately 260 cars had been shipped and eagerly absorbed. Picking will begin in earnest early in January. Growers believe the cost of picking will be a trifle higher than last year, but they do not anticipate any serious shortage of pickers.

MUCH VALENCIA PLANTING.

It is a question only of two or three years when the Valencia orange crop will equal the navel crop. There was 300 per cent. more Valencia tree planting last spring than of all other orange varieties combined. Orange county growers are largely of the Valencia variety, and these always faithfully contribute a huge amount to the total crop of Southern California. The Valencia orange is a favorite in the East, as the greatest demand comes in the summer, and the consumer likes a fresh-picked orange.

During the past season the California Fruit Growers' Exchange played an important part in the marketing of the fruit, 76 per cent. of the citrus crop of the State being handled by the exchange for the growers. The exchange's 220 packing-houses are now humming with activity. Packing forces, consisting largely of experienced girls and women, are assembled, and the icing and shipping facilities are ready for the big crop.

For the 1917-18 crop, returns to the growers were $47,501,000 net. The operating cost of the exchange was 5½ cents per box, the total marketing cost amounting to 1¼ per cent. of the gross sales. In addition, there was spent for advertising 2 cents per box for oranges and 4 cents for lemons.

It is not believed by citrus growers that Italian lemons will play a large part in the 1918-19 crop, for the reason that Italy's shipping will be busy trading in necessities. The California lemon production has increased 282 per cent. in the fifteen years ending August 1, and 45 per cent in the last five years. A recent report to the State Commissioner of Horticulture places the bearing lemon acreage at 22,521 acres, and non-bearing at 16,799 acres.

BIG MARKET YIELD.

The young acreage of citrus fruits in California will bring a constantly increasing production in years to come. The increased production in the past has partially been taken care of by improved methods of handling and marketing, bringing about economies and eliminating losses from decay and waste, thus allowing a lower price in the markets to stimulate demand, and still return a fair price to the producer. To maintain a sufficient return, the demand must be further increased by attracting new users and inducing present consumers to use citrus fruits in greater quantities.

This, according to E. G. Dezell, acting manager of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, can be done only by advertising. The opportunity is apparent, he says, in the fact that the average person in this country consumes an orange only about once in nine days, and a lemon about once a month.

The transportation system, which was precarious some time ago, has straightened out, and assurance is given to growers that perishables will be moved promptly during the marketing of the present crop.

NOTABLE NON-STOP RUN.

It is only a few years since the spectators at tractor demonstrations used to cheer when any of the contestants managed to plow a furrow and get back to its starting place without a mechanical breakdown. But much water has flowed under London bridge since then. Not long ago Lieut. G. A. Hammon of the Ordnance Department of the army walked into the Holt plant at Peoria, Ill., selected an eighty-five-horse-power "Caterpillar" artillery tractor which had just been built and with four enlisted men as a crew set off on a highway cruise, probably unique in tractor history. The normal road speed of this tractor is supposed to be three miles per hour, but this particular specimen did better than eighty miles per day for six days, arriving in Detroit, 480 miles from its starting place, in that length of time, during which it had traversed all sorts of roads, heavy with fall rains. During all this time the motor was allowed to run continuously and after 151 hours of operation had been concluded an examination was made of the entire vehicle, which was found to be in such excellent condition that it was at once ordered to proceed overland to the army proving ground at Aberdeen, Maryland, Lieut. L. S. Sheedwick taking charge of the tractor in Detroit.—[Motor.

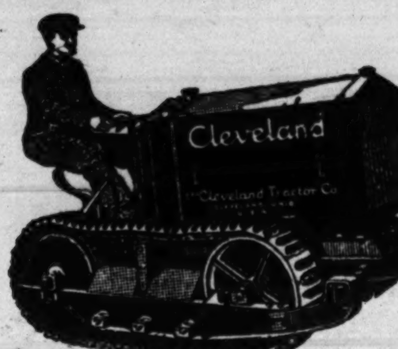
Cleveland Tractor



WE ANNOUNCE THE RECEIPT of what we believe to be the largest stock of spare parts ever carried by any tractor distributor. As the great factory is running at capacity turning out CLEVELANDS, the getting through at an early date of this large order was a difficult matter—but we won out. This means that Cleveland owners need never have their tractors laid up by reason of lack of parts.

In the past two weeks hundreds of farmers and orchardists have witnessed Cleveland demonstrations in Southern California. Were you there? Bear in mind that the CLEVELAND is particularly adapted to California conditions. It has ample traction surface which prevents slipping, it works soft soil like a daisy, has short turning radius—12 feet—and it eats up the hills.

Hardware and implement dealers report a constantly decreasing demand for harness. The reason is obvious. Progressive farmers and orchardists are going the tractor way. Are you progressive?

Cleveland owners in our territory are to have the service they are justly entitled to—and that is the best. Service stations have been established by the following dealers:—

A Wood Fire.

IT IS a strange thing to see men straining after expensive luxuries in life when at little or no expense at all they can have stone chimneys and wood fires.

It cannot be denied that the modern steam radiator keeps a house warmed, but it has no companionship; it is a purely commercial arrangement with which one engages to pay a certain price for so much heat. This thing makes no pretensions at friendship. It has no soul.

Nor can any more be said for the hot air furnace which sends its blasts out of the cellar, or for the heating stove which is really next to a dead thing, after all.

All can be said that there is to say, and all can be done that is to be done, and the fact still remains that the only fire to be spoken of outside of paying the bills for it is a wood fire. Like every good friend, it asks but little and gives so much.

We cannot imagine St. Francis speaking of "sister fire" in a sermon when only steam radiators or furnaces in the cellar were on hand to listen to him. No poet could make a song about them. No man can sit with them and conjure dreams.

But, let a man have a wood fire of a wintry night when his day's work is done, and he will sit content and ask for nothing else. It will speak to him and make pictures and it will summon up all his glad and tender memories of the past. More than that, he shall ride with kings, himself clothed in gold and purple, as the flames dance and flicker in the logs of his chimney.

The whole cycle of being is in that log in the chimney flames. It was a seed; it grew into a tree; sun and wind and rain were its ministers; the ax felled it; now it is transformed into another element; it dies in embers and becomes ashes; it returns to the soil of earth to nurture another seed that will grow to be another tree.

Nothing is lost. And, least of all is the time lost that a man spends when he sits with dreams before the glow and the gladness of his wood fire.

More than once when we sat beside the blaze of the stone chimney, watching the endless pageantry of its pictures, we have imagined that we saw the face of the first man who discovered that flame could be drawn from sticks of wood.

How many millions of years ago was it that this man lived? We are sure that it was long before there were chemists, and this is something else for which to be thankful. How was it that this first fire maker stumbled upon his discovery—the most wonderful of all the discoveries ever made by man down to this day?

Howbeit, he comes sometimes and does it all over again for us in the chimney's dancing flames. We see the wonder on his face. We hear him calling to his people to behold the miracle. He smiles out upon us as we tell him that he is the man who started everything that we boast of now—the wheels, the machines, the automobiles, the tractors, the airships and all.

But wait. One time, we think, we listened to the true story. It was on a winter's night, and the first fire maker told us that it all happened one time when he was making a song and was rubbing two sticks together to furnish an accompaniment. Suddenly the sticks flamed together in his hands.

So, that was the way wood fires came to be. A man was making a song, and it was so good a song that the flames danced to it out of two sticks of wood.

Good News.

THERE was an old saying that "Nothing good could come out of Nazareth." In these times there is a suspicion throughout the civilized world that nothing good can come out of Germany. But, if we can believe the news in the papers, there is at least one good thing to come out of that country.

The news dispatches state that the great gun works at Essen, the Krupp factories, are to be turned into the making of plows and farm tractors and other peace implements. We wouldn't wonder if the news were really true. The gun business is likely to become highly unprofitable both in Germany and elsewhere.

Perhaps we are about to witness the fulfillment of that prophecy in the Bible which tells of a time when the swords shall be made into plowshares and the spears into pruning hooks.

If so, it is good news. The world has never had news that could be better. God grant that the time is at last at hand when the energies of men shall be turned away from their heavy and squalid task of destruction.

Resolutions.

AS A MATTER of fact a man should make new resolutions every day, as well as making them at New Year's. But, if he can not or will not make them at any other time, we say let him make them at New Year's by all means. It is better to make resolutions that may be broken than never to make resolutions at all. There was an old fellow who used to say that he took a bath once a year whether he needed one or not. So, like that, let us all make at least one resolution now whether we think we need to do so or not.

For Remembrance.

IT IS with pleasure that we have learned of the decision of the War Department to permit the men who turned soldiers to make the world safe for democracy, to retain their uniforms as their personal properties now that the war is over.

We can imagine how a man would want to keep a thing like that—the clothes he wore in the great adventure. No man can buy that kind of clothes. They are beyond price. He must have served or else he never could have borne them on his back.

THE SEVEN GLENS.

The seven glens where I was born,
'Tis I can see them all,
Green in Spring with springing corn,
And golden in the Fall;
White they lie with Winter snow,
Gray with misted sky;
And, wandering still, where'er I go
For the seven glens I sigh.

Kind has the stranger been to me,
His hearthstone clean and bright,
Open his hand, his welcome free,
His shelter warm at night;
His salt I ate, I broke his bread,
And paid his gods their fee;
But, never place I've lain my head
Like the seven glens to me.

Now, if 'twere so that I could be
In the seven glens once more,
And I could have you there with me
To pass from door to door,
Trudging around each rolling hill,
The wayside roofs and fens,
You'd see how well they love me still
Within the seven glens.

Fair is the land where you belong,
Warm are your hearts and true,
And many is the lilting song
That I have made for you.
There's many a land that's bright with morn
And soft with stars aglow—
But, the seven glens where I was born,
'Tis there that I would go.

JOHN S. McGROARTY.

In the years to come, when these boys who went to the war have grown old, their children and their grandchildren will regard these uniforms as the most treasured of all the family heritages. There is not anything in the national museum at Washington regarded with so much reverence as the old blue and buff uniform of Gen. Washington.

Besides, there will be parades and things right along as the years go by, and then the men of our armies and navies will be taking their old uniforms out again to wear in the processions on the heels of the blaring bands.

A soldier's uniform is the badge of his loyalty and of his patriotism and his self-sacrifice. We are glad that the government will not claim them.

Time Fiddling.

THERE is a lot of time fiddled away in this world, one way and another, by good people who have the best of intentions.

We will venture to assert, along this line, that more time is fiddled away by folks who peck at languages than in any other manner. Almost everybody is seized at some stage in his life with a desire to add another tongue to his own, but it usually results in nothing more than time wasted.

You can hardly meet a man or a woman in America who has not, at one time or another, started in to study another language. And they never learned it. They studied spasmodically from a book, or maybe they took some lessons from a teacher, and that ended it.

There is only one way in the world to learn a language, and that is to practically drop everything else while the task is on hand. Of course there are instances of persons who have a special talent in this direction. They learn languages easily. But, they are rare.

Take Spanish, for instance, which is probably the least difficult of the languages to acquire. In our schools and in our homes there are numberless people studying Spanish today who will never be able to even half master it because they do not go about it in the right way.

The right way is to forget almost everything else that you are doing, associate with people who speak Spanish all the time, eat with them, play with them, work with them and, above all things else, learn to think in their language.

We venture also to say that the average man, ordinarily equipped mentally and with a fair education of his own, can learn Spanish in one month by strictly following the rule here set forth.

Business Doctors.

THERE is a highly useful class of men in this country who are known by the popular name of "business doctors." They are much in demand, for it is true that businesses, like individuals, get sick. And when they do, they need the doctor.

When a business doctor is called in he makes a thorough examination of his patient. He feels its pulse, looks at its tongue and its teeth, and acts otherwise quite the same as a medical doctor acts when he is called to cure a sick human being.

If the business be not hopelessly ill, the business doctor usually effects a cure. At any rate, he does a lot to help. But, it has appeared to us that he doesn't go far enough.

The business doctor examines only the business. We think that he would do well in many cases to also examine the man who runs or owns the business. He may find that the business is all right but that the man is all wrong.

We know of a case where the proprietor of a hotel asked a drummer if he could suggest anything to improve his hostelry. "Yes," replied the drummer promptly, "get a new proprietor."

In other words, personality has come to be an asset in modern business. You might not think it, but in businesses like the Standard Oil, the Steel Trust and other gigantic concerns, personality permeates their entire ramifications.

The time has long since gone by when a business man can say "The public be damned" and get away with it. If he pursues that policy his business will go to pieces, and all the business doctors in the world can't save it.

Our Motherlands.

THE assertion that England is the motherland of America is true enough to a certain extent. But, America has several motherlands when you consider it as a whole, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf.

New England and the Atlantic seaboard generally would seem to be quite justified in regarding England as its mother country, when New York is left out. New York, it will be remembered, was settled by the Dutch. Therefore, Holland is New York's motherland. It was originally called New Amsterdam.

Louisiana and Northwestern America were explored, pioneered and first settled by the French. California and the Southwest were the great prize drawn by Spain. Hence, France and Spain almost must justly be set down as two more of our motherlands.

But, what are we to do with the Middle West, it may be asked? We think that the Middle West has the best of it all. It can claim the United States as its motherland.

To be sure, all the aforementioned nations are eager now to claim us as their offspring. It is all very pleasant, and we should be happy in the thought that this is the case. However, history is to be reckoned with and we must take the facts as we find them. We can't play any favorite, even though we were inclined to do so.

But, after all, there are no grounds for any of these claims at the present time. America is made up now of all the races of the earth. There are a lot of Irish in this country, Germans, Slavs, Jews and other peoples. The motherland question is too complicated to be seriously contemplated.

A Contrast.

WHEN President Wilson's grandfather emigrated from Ireland to seek his fortune in America, he had a much harder time crossing the Atlantic Ocean than the President has had. Which, among other things, goes to show how times and ocean travel have changed.

In the days of the President's grandfather, it was no joke to cross the great waters in a ship from the other side to this. Anywhere between ten and fifteen weeks were required for the journey that is now made in five or six days.

Nor is the difference one of time alone. There were many discomforts to be endured in the old days that are now unknown. Then, even the passengers occupying the better quarters of the ships had to put up with a lot that was far from pleasant. And, as to the steerage passengers, it is a wonder how they stood it at all.

When a poor emigrant crossed from Europe to America fifty years or more ago he had to cook his own meals on board and was herded down in the ship's bowels like a man in a dungeon. In storms the old tubs rolled something awful. Only a stomach of leather could stand the onslaught. Ship's fever was the commonest thing in the world on the high seas of those old times.

Moreover, when the ships left the shore it was as though the darkness of oblivion had swallowed them. Many weeks had to elapse before word could be had of them again.

You know how it is now. You can communicate with a ship on the ocean anywhere at any time by wireless. The vessels are as comfortable as a big hotel, and it is as safe at sea as it is on land, and maybe more so.

If the same stride is kept up that the past century has seen, it would be well worth while to come back on a visit to this earth in another hundred years from now.

The Way to Know.

THE way to really know you have grown old is not to look at the gray hairs in your head or to feel sore when some kid gets up in a street car and offers you a seat. These things may happen to you while you are still really young from every viewpoint on earth except your years.

But, there is one sure way to know you are old, and that is when you hear a brass band going down the street and you don't care to follow it. If ever that indifference hits you, be sure that the halcyon days have passed forever as far as you are concerned. When anyone, then calls you "grandpa" right to your face, you can't deny it.

Another Name Please.

IN FROM the great ocean or down the coast from Oregon come the wild horses of the rain, turning the brown hills of California to emerald green, and we then say it is winter.

The sun shines out after the showers and the air is like June in the outlands of the long ago, the flowers are abloom, men tear around in straw hats, the girls go barenecked in light and airy gowns, and still we say it is winter.

It is a wrong word and we ought to have a better. Whatever it is, it isn't winter. If it be winter, then what they have at the same time of the year back yonder must be something else. Either they have got to change the word or else we must do so.

Barney Baruch has resigned as chairman of the War Industries Board and will return to Wall street. Barney lost a lot of money working for the government at a dollar a year. In fact, he was so short that he was only able to take $100,000 in the Fourth Liberty Bond sale.

Will We Boycott Germany.

banking, shipping and industrial colonization to all corners of the earth."

At a meeting in Milan of Italian business men Encardio Momigliano, an eminent lawyer, advised his countrymen "to look the facts calmly and squarely in the face." Though Germany would be defeated, its "population of 70,000,000 souls will not be destroyed and will represent for all time in Europe a formidable economic reality. We cannot get away from this," he said "and therefore the economic problems of the period after the war will be more urgent and more imposing than ever."

German business men, he asserted, "had been playing a dishonest game, while their competitors played the game according to the rules. "If," he continued, "they desire to take their place again at the table of economic competition they will have to do so under the conditions of playing fairly, else they will have to stay out of the game."

No one nowadays accepts the word of a German—of any German in Germany. Some business men outside of Germany have long known about the corrupt practices, the trickery and greed of the business men inside of Germany. When, however, common business methods as followed in that country were openly applied in war and diplomacy, the world was profoundly shocked and surprised.

Were kings and statesmen and great generals no more than vulgar liars? civilization asked. Whether the German code of criminal behavior was built up by business or by the government may be discovered some day. No matter whence it came, it seems to control the conduct of the high and low. The man in the ranks, a grenade in hand, cried "Kamerad" and then murdered the soldier who spared his life. Treachery of the same kind, in principle, at least, is to be found in German business life. A German prefers to cheat an Englishman, a Frenchman or an American, but he will cheat one of his own countrymen, if no other person is in sight.

They Quietly Penetrate One by One Till All Are In.

ANOTHER practice that the German army copied from German business is known to military writers as infiltration. A hundred German soldiers, hidden in the brush would watch, like Indians, for a hole in the French or British front. Seeing an opening, they went through it one by one. Other groups were doing the same elsewhere. Uniting, they fell upon their enemy from behind.

German business men employ the same tactics in every country throughout the world. "Quiet penetration," Mr. Snow terms this method of attack. Mr. Palmer, the custodian of alien property, has shown by his investigations that hundreds of millions of dollars of German money were hard at work all over the United States in extending German business and in obtaining funds for the war that had been planned against Europe and this country.

And concealed millions at that—millions that were disguised by American trade names, as many millions elsewhere are hidden under English, French, Spanish, Italian, Swedish, Norwegian and other names.

"People everywhere," Mr. Snow says, "are now awake to the German methods, but the mistake must not be made of underestimating the recuperative power of the Germans and of overestimating the effects of the 'burden of billions' resting on Germany as the result of the war."

The chief industry of Germany, when at peace, is agriculture, for which it must have phosphates bought elsewhere. Its second industry is the manufacture of textiles. Cotton is obtained, for most part, in the United States; wool in Australia and South Africa and silk in France and Italy. For its metal industries Germany must have Bolivian tin, American copper, French aluminum and Australian zinc and lead. It can get jute only in India and rubber only through Great Britain.

Industries as well as armies can be put into pockets. Business as well as fleets can be bottled up. Only by the grace of the Allies and the United States will Germany ever again become a great world trader. And, given copper and cotton, pottery clays and rubber, wool and lumber, will there be any great rush of international buyers?

Curious Hotel Customs.

Abroad, where many quaint and curious hotels, taverns, and inns of respectable antiquity abound, it is natural to find many odd customs followed to this day by the patrons of these caravansaries.

There is an inn in a town on the Rhine wherein, whenever a patron is heard to swear, he must place a coin equivalent to the value of 1 cent on the bar of the counter.

Until recent years there was a most respectable old inn in Warwickshire, Eng., the proprietor of which was accustomed to invite all his patrons to accompany him and his wife Sunday mornings to a church directly opposite the inn. On returning from service each customer was expected to partake of refreshments offered by the hospitable landlord free of charge.

Those who put up at one hotel in Edinburgh obtain, if they are unaccustomed to the ways of the place, a first-hand knowledge of the Scottish disposition. Patrons of this hotel must remember to keep their shoes or boots in their rooms overnight, otherwise their footgear will be blacked, regardless of its original color.

There is a "public house" in Dumfries where may be seen an old armchair alleged to have been invariably used by the poet Burns when he visited the place. All who sit in this chair are required to "treat" all who may be in the room at the time.

There is a tavern in the south of France where an almost incredible custom prevails. Patrons are allowed one drink only. Should this prove insufficient to quench their thirst, they must leave the inn and take a walk before they are permitted to have another.

The Austrian proprietor of an inn in Hungary evolved a quaint idea for providing funds for charitable entertainments. A patron in this inn, seeking refreshment, is expected to knock on the table or counter before drinking. Any violation of this rule is penalized by a small fine, and the money thus obtained goes to provide funds for the relief and entertainment of the poor of the village.

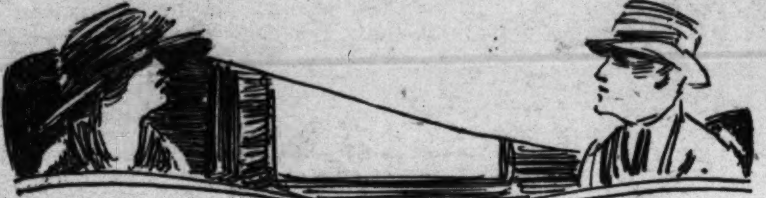
MATTHEW'S ADVENTURE PIQUANT.

BY FLORENCE RYERSON.



THERE was no excuse for Matthew and none is offered. The whole affair was borne of a sort of mental intoxication, the ennui of a three hour train trip, and a too long and faithful devotion to his home. Even before he left the bosom of his family that morning there had been evidences of impending mental disturbance. He was irritable, and vaguely unhappy, also within him there was a conviction that life was a poor affair after all. If he had been a woman he would have called it nerves and retired to the living room couch with a box of chocolates. As it was he laid it to the weather, the dinner he had eaten the night before, everything but the true cause, for Matthew was not given to self analysis.

Even now as he sat in the Pullman, with an uninterrupted journey of three hours ahead of him, he did not delve into the substrata of his own mental processes, but chose, instead, to run back through the events of the morning, and try, from mere external evidence to diagnose the feeling of depression which weighed him down.

There had been bacon and eggs for breakfast. Matthew liked bacon and insisted upon eggs, yet he had felt almost abused when the maid set the platter before him. There had been bacon once before that week. On Monday, and this was only Thursday. Bacon on Mondays and Thursdays, sausages on Tuesday and Friday was codfish morning. Ruth, his wife was an efficient housekeeper and made a point of system.

Although he had never thought of it before it suddenly seemed almost unbearable to Matthew that he should have to go on, unchanging, the rest of his life with bacon and eggs on Monday and Thursday and sausages Tuesday morning.

"I wish we occasionally had something different for breakfast," he said, savagely stabbing an egg with his fork.

Ruth looked up from the plate she was fixing for Matthew Junior with a smile of calm inquiry.

"If there's anything you want, dear, I'll order it, of course," she said. "What would you like?" Thus neatly shifting the responsibility to his shoulders.

Matthew thought for an instant and then gave it up.

"Oh, nothing," he said, gloomily. "I'm just sick of bacon, that's all." It came over him as he ate that the trouble was really not with the breakfast but with the world. There were only bacon and ham and sausage for breakfast, and anyone who ate something different, caviar, say, or truffles, would be judged a fool.

Ruth was carrying on a cheerful monologue, interrupting her remarks with little coos and gurgles aimed at Betsy girl, aged six months, who sat fatly in her high chair and accorded her mother's attempts at humor the reward of a moist smile.

Matthew transferred his irritation from his breakfast to his wife. Usually he was loyally and calmly devoted, but this morning he caught himself wishing she wouldn't always wear her hair in that commonplace way, just caught up in a knot at the back of her head. It was becoming of course, and all that, but sometimes a fellow liked a change.

Her dresses, too. They were always plain in the morning, neat, of course, but plain. Mentally he pictured a play he had seen where the heroine floated down to breakfast in a soft pink thing with lace and ribbons. Of course she hadn't two children, it was true, but, hang it all, why was the world always the same, bacon and eggs, and blue crepe dresses!

He picked up the paper and scanned it, aggrieved. It might have been yesterday's paper, or the day before's. He threw it down pettishly.

"Headache?" inquired Ruth and he shook his head, frowning a little. He had known she was going to say that, and he knew what her next remark would be, even before her lips formed the words.

"I told you not to eat two helpings of cabbage, dear. It always disagrees with you."

He pushed his chair back from the table and rose with unnecessary noise.

"Hang it all!" he almost wailed. "Can't you let a fellow alone? I wanted the cabbage!"

"All right," said his wife, calmly. "You'll find the soda mints in the bathroom closet, and dear," she raised her voice as he ascended the stairs. "Bring down the baby's pen when you come."

Matthew loathed that pen. It was of migratory habits, and, like the Arabs and their tents, folded silently and stole away. It generally folded on his thumb, or barked his shins in some dark spot where it had no possible business. Usually he was mildly philosophic about it, but this morning he carried it down stairs, loathing it in every pore. He felt it a positive virtue that he did not say any of the sarcastic things which seethed within him, and it did not improve his temper to realize that Ruth was serenely unconscious of his frame of mind.

"Doctor says Betsy is lots heavier than the Bolton baby and he's four weeks older," she was saying. "And Mrs. Bolton told Dora's cousin—"

"Look here!" said Matthew, desperately. "I can't stand this prattle about things any longer!"

"About what things?" said his wife, raising surprised eyes.

"About babies," said Matthew miserably "And bacon, and pens and things."

Ruth regarded him thoughtfully, but he could see that her mind was elsewhere.

"That suit needs pressing," she remarked. "And while you're down at the cleaners you might ask him—"

"I'm going," said Matthew hurriedly. He would not, he positively would not bring home any more bundles.

"All right," said Ruth. She flecked off the inevitable bit of lint from his collar, straightened his tie, and kissed him absently. Matthew strode down the steps and out the front gate with a new grievance. She might have kissed him with a little more feeling, he reflected. Of course he would probably call her up during the day, and he was coming home to dinner that night, but, hang it all, a fellow liked to be appreciated. Lots of times people were run over down town and their wives never saw them alive again. He rapidly sketched in a fatal accident with himself in the principal role and Ruth weeping in the background. He was almost cheerful by the time he got to the office, but one look at his desk and his heart sank.

There, on the top of the pile of mail, was a letter from Brown and Little. He knew what that meant, a trip to Scranton, two hours' conference with a couple of musty attorneys, and a deadly journey of three hours on the train. He had been expecting it for a week. Of course it had to come today! He tore the envelope open and glared at the letter, then turned to his secretary.

"Phone Brown and Little that I'll be down on the 10:40," he said, and turned away before she could reply. She was a good secretary but she had a way of forming her words carefully with her lips before she spoke, and Matthew felt that he could not, no really, he could not stand it today.

All the way to the station he fought off the impulse to mutter savagely to himself, but on the train his feelings were a little relieved. The guard at the gate pushed him a bit and Matthew unburdened himself of several sarcastic things he desired to say to someone. Also he took the man's number and promised himself to report his impudence to the company the first thing upon his return.

The little glow that the vent to his feelings afforded did not last long and for three hours he sat in a state of mind bordering on frenzy while the train ran between straight, unending fields of grain. It seemed to Matthew that he couldn't bear it all. Bacon and eggs and Ruth in a blue crepe dress, his office with the substantial furniture and the secretary who mouthed her words.

The conference with Brown and Little was lengthy and ponderous. No trial of wits here, but a matter of dull routine which was a part of the deadly sameness about him. He gave his opinions absently and left the partners, somewhat surprised at his shortness, to saunter back to the station. There was no hurry, for the time was such that he had not even the mild excitement of running for his train.

Pausing in the station he scanned the array of magazines upon the newspaper stand. An unending array of pretty girls in bathing suits. You could not tell one from the other, or this month's from last's. He shook his head at the clerk and entering the waiting train sat gloomily down on a dusty plush seat in the Pullman.

He would have dinner in the diner, he reflected. It would be after 9 o'clock when he reached home and the children would be in bed. Like enough Ruth would have gone to, she did sometimes, and he would have to let himself into the house. Oh, well, it was life and the trouble must be with himself, that he, the only one among those about him, wanted something different.

It was at that moment that he definitely noticed the girl in green. He had been watching her before in a subconscious fashion but the image had registered upon his retina, not his brain. But now he saw that she was looking at him, sidewise, of course, and furtively, but just the same, quite evidently noticing him.

She was a good looking girl in a blond sort of way. She was wholesome and natural, and, even to Matthew's critical eye, she seemed like a person who might be interesting. Her age was problematical. She might be 20 or 30, but the weight of evidence swung toward 25. She was in a trim green suit, and the little hat which lay on the seat beside her was a trifle jaunty with a pair of black wings rising from the brim. Her hands, folded in her lap, were remarkably slim and ringless.

Matthew, who had gradually fallen into the habit of comparing all women with Ruth, something as though she were a three foot rule, by which the feminine world must be measured, decided that she was not as pretty as his wife, but looked (he hated to admit it, but the thought would come,) more interesting.

She was looking away now, and he realized that he had been staring almost rudely. Still, she did not seem angry. Instead Matthew had the unaccountable feeling that she wanted him to look at her. It may have been the flush in her cheek or the faintly conscious poise of her head, something seemed to whisper that she almost wished he would speak to her. Even as he looked she reached up and began to fumble helplessly with the window shade. In an instant, urged by some inexplicable impulse, Matthew was across the aisle.

"Allow me," he said, and pulled down the shade which, as he had expected, yielded to his hand quite easily.

"Thank you!" said the girl, a little breathlessly. "The—the shade stuck."

It was a lie. A deliberate and delightful lie, and that knowledge nerved Matthew to drop into the seat opposite her.

"I am grateful to the shade," he declared and waved a hand in the direction of the car. "One more hour of this and I should have been taken from the train entirely mad."

The girl nodded.

"It's awful, isn't it!" You almost hope there'll be an accident. Not a dangerous one, of course, but just something, anything to break the monotony."

"I've been hoping against hope that something would happen," said Matthew.

"I know!" breathed the girl. "I've been feeling that way all day."

"We are kindred spirits!" declared Matthew, and they both laughed as though they were 18 instead of 25 and two and thirty.

After that they discussed many things. Matthew quoted Browning, a thing he had not done for years; quoted it incorrectly, but with a flourish that carried it off, and the girl showed a remarkable grasp of politics. She even said one or two things anent the political situation which were really quite brilliant for one of her sex. Also she showed a surprising knowledge of Japanese prints.

Matthew knew nothing of Japanese prints, but he was content that she should know. A woman ought to have her interests, he reflected, forgetting quite the scathing arraignment he was wont to make to Ruth of women in politics, harangues which invariably ended with the original statement that women's place was the home.

But this was different. The girl opposite him had a way of delivering her opinions with a soft rising inflection which was vaguely complimentary to him, as a man. Also she crinkled her nose delightfully when she laughed. He found himself waiting for it to crinkle and saying humorous things to call forth her smile. Spurred on by her evident appreciation, he said several things which were really clever, subconsciously filing them away to try later on Ruth.

Suddenly, in the middle of a bon mot, he realized that he was hungry. He regarded the girl before him thoughtfully. Would she be willing to have dinner with him? He could but try.

THINGS FOR EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

BY RETTA BADGER.

[Any information regarding things illustrated or described on this page gladly given. Suggestions from readers are always welcome. Address all communications for this department to Retta Badger, The Times, Los Angeles.]

WHEN you are doing work in the yard, the youngest member of the family likes to be out with you, but he is not always safe running loose if you are doing anything that will take your attention from him, or perhaps you want him to have the air but not get on the damp ground. An ingenious father made the pen in the illustration for his small son. It is heavy and solid enough so that there is no danger of its upsetting and its wooden rollers move easily anywhere you want to push it. This pen is large enough to hold toys for the baby's amusement and yet is not too large to get through a doorway. It was made from pieces of wood that were about the house and so did not cost anything to build.

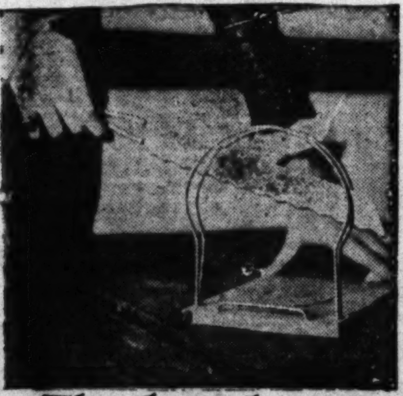
THE BREAD SAVER.

Cutting the bread on the table has become quite the thing to do, but even in this there can be waste if the slices are too thick. The adjustable bread board insures cutting them evenly and not too hefty. The bread slides under a simple arrangement of strong wires that can be placed in holes of varying distances apart, thus allowing a thick or thin slice to be cut as wanted. It may be set to the required thickness for table use and left that way for every day. Thinner slices may be obtained for sandwiches by moving the wires over one or two pegs. This simple device will save its initial cost in a very short time by eliminating all waste in bread.



The bread saver.

A FEW LENGTHS OF HOSE.

I stand for what is plain and absolutely practical in the household article. Housekeeping is strenuous enough without the effort incident to following up impossible suggestions, therefore I consider it positively immoral to publish anything that is not easily "do-able."

But many magazines which cater to women are apparently not so scrupulous and exploit ideas which are quite impractical. For instance there is quite a fad at present for articles concerning the wonderful and beautiful things which may be made of old stockings—ranging from baby shirts and bags to lovely dress and hat trimmings.

Now every experienced woman knows, and every inexperienced woman should be told, that by the time a pair of stockings is so worn in the feet that it is ready to discard, there are so many dropped stitches and runs in the upper part that, though its usefulness may not have departed, its beauty certainly has and it is fitted for only the more menial purposes.

Do not therefore promptly throw out all your old stockings, for there are still many uses to which they may be put. They make fine sleeve protectors when you must do messy work in your treasured good clothes. Opened up, folded over and sewed together into a double, irregular square they are extra good for the handling of hot dishes, and are most easily kept clean. Several long black legs opened up and sewed together make dusters that are lint free, and the old socks of the men in the family will prove easy to slip on the hand and are a great protection to the skin when one is sweeping. They are better than gloves in this respect that they are easier to cleanse.

It is well to keep on hand the legs of a few white stockings. In these days of sleeveless nightgowns, they will add to the warmth and comfort of one confined to her bed, if slipped onto the arms before the kimono is donned, and securely pinned to the shoulders of the nightdress.

I have often found myself at mountain or sea shore or taking a long automobile drive without adequate wraps, and have managed the situation perfectly by protecting my arms with white stocking legs and putting a black pair, minus the feet, on under my ordinary foot covering.

An admirable mop rag can be made from a bunch of old socks, and light and warm padding for a comforter is fashioned by basting stockings flat onto an old sheet.

Stockings cut into inch wide strips round and round can be used in the manufacture of rugs, either woven or braided.

If by chance you do have some black stockings with legs still whole and worn out feet, the best use to be made of them is in constructing tights for some small child. The legs may be opened for a little way at the top and the two joined together in trouser form and an elastic run in the top. The foot end may be hemmed and allowed to run down inside the child's stocking, or it may be cut off, hemmed, and drawn up with an elastic at the knee.

The raveled silk from stockings is sometimes good enough to knit into scarfs, etc., along with wool of the same shade. The stocking in this case should be carried along with the knitting and only raveled as it is used. There will be numerous breaks in the continuity, but the thread may be invisibly joined and a very pretty, crinkley effect is produced in the scarf.

If you will cut your old silk hose into narrow, bias strips and draw the strands strongly and swiftly over the blades of a chopping knife it will frazzle them sufficiently to transform them into good stuffing for a cushion. But I would not really advise anyone to do this who had a more profitable occupation.

My initial proposition was that old stockings were not fit as a rule for trimming purposes, but sometimes one has a present of a pair of entirely too flamboyant coloring. I saw a lovely sports hat which was covered with such a pair and trimmed with a twist of the same with raveled tassels at the ends.—J. G.

APPLES AND BANANAS.

Quarter fruit and place in a baking pan; dot each layer with butter and chopped nuts; bake in a quick oven, basting frequently with a sauce made of a half cup of water, a tablespoon of white syrup and a little lemon juice.

SEWING ROOM HELPS.

It is very difficult to make an even hem in a plaited skirt unless the plaits are basted in. Baste the plaits the entire length of the skirt, turn up the hem and pin in place. Press firmly with a warm iron. Take out the pins and basting threads and hem the skirt following the crease made where it was pressed in. You will be delighted with the even hanging of your skirt.

If a dress has been so outgrown as to be too short even to face, a new hem may be so cleverly added so as not to show. Stitch on a piece of the same kind of material, double the width of the hem you wish to add. Turn the hem and baste. Sew in by machine right side up and in stitching follow the exact line where the piece has been sewed on. Made in this way it would take a clever person to detect the added hem.

When basting a wool garment use silk instead of cotton thread. You can leave this basting in until after the final pressing and there will be no marks showing where the basting was done.

Use tape for mending small holes and tears in white material. Having a selvage edge it needs no turning under and makes a neat patch, easy and quick to apply.

To mend a torn place in a freshly laundered curtain, cut a patch out of lace or net to match as near as possible, dip in starch and iron on over the whole. It will make a neat patch and will be next to impossible to detect.

A HANDY MENDING BAG.

Even the weekly darning and mending can be made a pleasant task with the help of a mending bag properly fitted out.

A large cretonne knitting bag is ideal for this purpose. Put a large pocket in each side. In these pockets put needles, thread, darning cotton, thimble, scissors, tape, a few pieces of cloth for mending, buttons, etc. When anything needs mending it can be tucked in this capacious bag out of sight, and at odd moments it is a simple thing to slip this bag on your arm, take it out on the porch or to your favorite seat and do a bit of mending. You will be surprised to see how quick the mending will fly through your fingers, how the holes in hubby's socks disappear like magic in the peace of pleasant surroundings.

COPPER AS A PEACE ASSET.

BY FRANK G. CARPENTER.

WASHINGTON (D. C.)—I write of King Copper as one of the live working monarchs in the rehabilitation of peace. For four years his efforts have been devoted to the waging of war. He has been a vital part of every engagement and has largely aided in defeating the Kaiser. The shortage of copper in Germany began six months after the German invasion. Prior to that time the Germans had consumed about 300,000 tons a year and only one-tenth of this came from mines within their own boundaries.

Later the domestic product was slightly increased and the government tried to piece out the balance by stripping the metal from the roofs of their houses, by robbing their churches of their bells and by collecting from the people kitchen utensils, copper and brass lamps, locks, knobs and hardware of every description. They did likewise as to all invaded territory. France and Belgium were skinned of all the copper in sight and the same was true of Austria-Hungary, Serbia, Rumania and some parts of Russia.

Copper is used in most war materials. In connection with zinc it forms brass, the most important of all metal alloys. Hundreds of thousands of tons of it are consumed in this way for cartridge cases and shell fuses, and it has its place in every big gun and almost every weapon of war. It is used in airplanes and motor cars, and it is almost indispensable for electrical and thermal transmission.

It is estimated that every mile of trolley line in the United States requires 2000 pounds of copper for power transmission alone, and about ten years ago the American Bell Telephone system had in use more than 400,000,000 pounds of wires made of copper. It was used for telegraph and telephone lines on the battlefields, and the ocean cables, of which there are now over 200,000 miles, eat it up by the thousands of tons.

Copper is used largely in shipbuilding and in the past the wooden vessels were often copper bottomed. It is employed in making machines of all kinds, and it is a part of the foundation of modern industry as well as modern warfare.

Pins Alone Use Millions of Pounds of Copper.

TAKE the insignificant matter of the pins you use for fastening your clothes. We use millions of pounds of copper for that purpose alone. There is one firm in Connecticut that uses 12,000 pounds of copper a day for making eyelets and vamps for shoes. The eyelet metal has to be rolled out so thin that the pieces do not vary in thickness more than one-fifth of the breadth of the human hair, and the metal is such that it can be shaped to the finest degree of accuracy.

For this reason it is important in the making of scientific instruments. In fact it is difficult to carry on any great industrial machine without copper. The need for it will grow greater and greater during these days of reconstruction and the government is urging the increase of our output in every possible way.

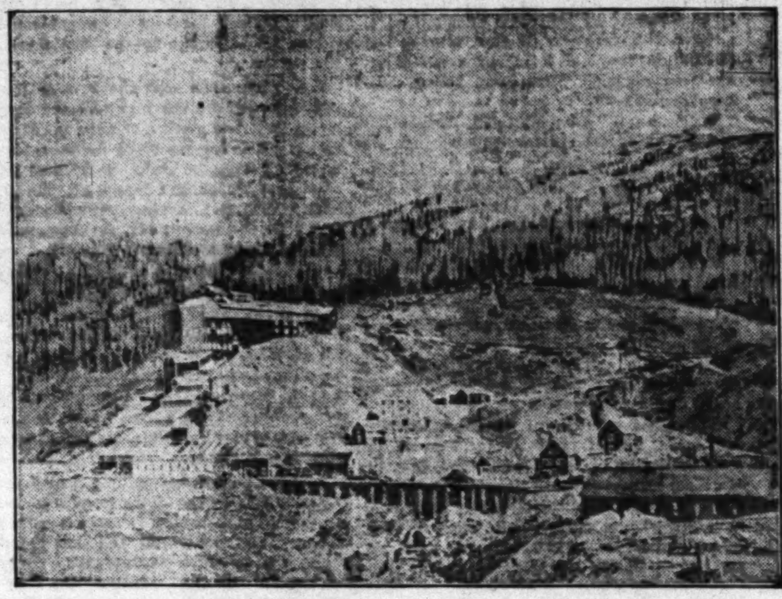
It is interesting to know where the world's copper comes from. The average production for the past ten years has been little more than 2,000,000,000 pounds. It began with less than 1,600,000,000 pounds in 1907 and it has steadily increased almost every year until in 1916 the output was more than 3,000,000,000 pounds. The increase of 1916 over 1914 is more than 50 per cent. and almost the whole of this increase has come from the United States. For years we have been producing more than half the copper in the world, and in 1916 we produced about two-thirds of all that was mined. We shall probably do better this year.

United States Biggest Copper Country in World.

THE United States is the chief copper country of the world. We produce six times as much as Mexico, which is our nearest rival, and more than eight times as much as Spain, which was for a long time the world's chief copper producer. The product of Michigan is more than half as large as that of all Mexico, and Arizona and Montana have a copper output greater than that of any two foreign nations combined.

Utah has some of the largest copper mines of the world and the territory of Alaska produced almost 120,000,000 pounds of copper in 1916. During my recent trip to that country I talked with the manager of the Kennecott mine and was told that they could land copper in Liverpool at something like 5 cents a pound. It was then selling for 25 cents a pound. According to the estimates of the Geological Survey for 1913 the United States was producing 60 per cent. of the world's copper, Europe 13 per cent., Canada and Mexico 8 per cent., South America and Cuba 7 per cent. and all other countries 12 per cent. The proportion in our favor is even greater today.

But first let me give you some idea of our copper competitors. They will all be in the market to supply the raw material now that the war is over, and every industrial nation will be among the purchasers. The Germans can control the mines within their own boundaries, and upon the peace terms only will depend as to whether they are to get copper from Russia and Asia Minor. I doubt not they have already made contracts for copper with Spain, and they will be combing other parts of the world for ore for their industries as soon as the terms of peace are in force.



The world's highest smelter on the tops of the Andes. It belongs to Americans. It turns out more than 100,000 pounds of copper a day.

Spain has one of the oldest and most famous of all copper mines. It is situated in the southern part of the peninsula, not far from Palos, where Columbus fitted out his first expedition for the discovery of America. The mine is known as the Rio Tinto. It covers eight square miles, and gives a living to more than 50,000 people. It is worked by tunnels and quarries, and its terraces are traversed by nearly sixty miles of railways on which 750 cars are kept running to get out the ore. This mine has been worked for thousands of years, and there is a tradition that the copper used in Solomon's Temple came from it.

Copper is one of the six metals mentioned in the Old Testament. There are mines in the desert of Sinai which probably supplied metal for ancient Egypt. Those mines are said to be the oldest known to man. The workings are still visible and they were operated as recently as 1300 B. C., at which time a bronze statue of Rameses II was cast. Whether the copper came from Sinai is not known.

Among the copper deposits of Russia are some in the Caucasus Mountains, not far from Batum, in which American capital is interested. The mines there have been worked for centuries, but recent development work shows that they still contain many million tons of copper ore of more than 3 per cent. values. The ore lies in a flat body, which is from 80 to 120 feet thick on the side of a steep mountain, so that the overburden can be sluiced down by hydraulic giants and the ore quarried out.

The plans of the Americans were to smelt the ore on the ground, and to equip the mines with all modern mining conveniences. They were running the mines and smelters with fuel oil brought by the company's own pipe line from Batum and carried there from the Caspian oil fields in tank cars. Just before the war opened upward of 1000 men were employed and the copper produced was being sold to the Russians.

There are immense copper deposits in Africa and South America. Some of the largest in Africa lie in Belgian territory. They are in the Kongo Free State upon the great ridge that runs between the Kongo and Zambesi rivers, and they will be reached by railroads from Portuguese East Africa or by a branch extension from the road from Capetown to Cairo. I went to the end of the southern extension of the Cape to Cairo line which now terminates not a great distance from Lake Tanganyika, and spent some time at the zinc and lead mines of Broken Hill in Northern Rhodesia. While there I saw nuggets of copper that had been taken from the great Kongo Free State and hoes, spears and axes of solid copper, made by the natives. The mining engineers told me that more than 100 copper mines have been discovered, and that more than 2,000,000 tons of copper is already in sight.

American Capital in Copper in South America.

SOME of the largest copper mines of South America are owned by American capital. The Guggenheim syndicate has enormous mines in Chile, and it exports copper from there to the United States. The largest of its deposits are near Antofagasta and others are the Braden mines, not a long distance from Santiago. There are also large copper mines in Bolivia, and some of the most famous of the world are to be found in Peru. During my last trip to that country I found a colony of Americans taking out copper from the very top of the Andes.

They have erected a smelter at 14,000 feet above the sea, and are turning out more than 200,000 pounds of copper a day. They are working the old mines of Cerro de Pasco, where silver was discovered almost 300 years ago, and from where something like 500,000,000 ounces of silver have been taken out. They are now finding copper below where the silver ore was and are mining it at a great profit. The work is being done by the Peruvian Indians, but the foremen are Americans. The stock of the company is listed on the New York Stock Exchange. The smelter is the highest in the world.

There are large copper mines in Cuba about twelve miles west of Santiago which were opened up less than forty years after Columbus set foot on that island. They were worked for 200 years by the Spanish government and before the Calumet and Hecla mines of Lake Superior were discovered they were considered the richest copper mines of the world. They are now owned by Americans. The ore is smelted and sent to the United States.

I visited the property not long ago, and found hundreds of Mexicans working under American foremen. They are now mining something like 1200 feet below the surface, and pumps have to be kept going to take out the water. Some of the tunnels are 900 feet below the level of the sea. The ore is of a low grade, and the deposits do not compare in richness or magnitude with those of many small mines of the West.

Began Copper Mining in United States in 1709.

AS TO the copper deposits of the United States, they are the largest and most valuable of the world. We have copper scattered here and there over our country from Alabama to Maine, and from Lake Superior to Alaska. The mineral was found in Massachusetts twelve years after the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock, and in 1709 a company was incorporated in Connecticut to work copper ore. At about the same time they were mining copper in New Jersey and sending the ore to England for smelting.

Benjamin Franklin once visited the New Jersey mines before the War of the Revolution, and at its close Nicholas J. Roosevelt, a great granduncle of Theodore, had an interest in them and organized a company to put up a smelter and a copper and brass rolling mill there. Other mines were soon found in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, and Tennessee was once one of the chief copper producers of the country.

Our great copper era began with the opening up of the copper deposits of Lake Superior. These began to be mined something like seventy-five years ago, and since then they have produced metal to a value of many hundreds of millions of dollars. At the close of 1914 they had produced more than 5,500,000,000 pounds of refined copper, or more than the whole world has produced in any two years since they were opened.

The copper of Lake Superior is unique in that it is about the only district from which a large output is derived from native copper. The copper occurs in large masses, some weighing as much as 800,000 pounds. Much of it is low grade, but it is handled on an immense scale and that at a great profit. The dividends paid from the various mines have run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and many of the fortunes in copper have been made from them.

Pig Discovered One of Richest Mines.

WHEN I visited this region many years ago I was told how one of the richest mines was discovered. A pig had fallen into a hole, and in trying to root its way out it uncovered the ore which was finally developed in the Calumet and Hecla, a property which has paid many millions in dividends, and will continue to pay for years to come. There are now several scores of copper mines in that region.

We have some of the richest copper deposits of the world on our Rocky Mountain plateau. There are some near Butte, Mont., which produce more copper than any two foreign countries, and the present output of Arizona is more than 1,000,000 pounds per day all the year through. Arizona ranks first among our copper producers, Montana second, after which come Utah and Michigan.

It was the Anaconda copper mine near Butte that made the fortune of Marcus Daly, and it was the United Verde of Arizona which added so greatly to the wealth of William A. Clark. The controlling interest in the latter property was bought by Mr. Clark thirty years ago for less than $30,000, and since then it has for long periods produced copper worth twenty times that much. Senator Clark was once offered $25,000,000 in cash for the property, and during the first twenty years of its operation it had an output of $90,000,000 worth of ore. The ore has gold and silver mixed with the copper, and the gold and silver, I am told, have been enough to pay the running expenses, leaving the copper all profit.

One of the most wonderful copper mines of today is at Bingham, not far from Salt Lake City. It is known as the Utah Copper mine. It produced more than 13,000,000 tons of ore last year, and this, computed at seventeen pounds refined copper per ton, made a product of more than 220,000,000 pounds, which was worth over $60,000,000.

The Utah Copper mine is perhaps the largest in the world. It consists of a mountain of low-grade ore, which can be mined with steam shovels, and it has great mills and reduction works which handle enormous quantities of ore at a profit. The mine paid more than $23,000,000 in dividends last year, and its total dividends distributed to date have been more than $75,000,000. It has produced more than 1,000,000,000 pounds of copper.

Why not teach people to live so that their blood is pure and they are consequently immune? Or, when people get sick, why not treat them so that they will get over it quickly, and be benefited by the housecleaning process, instead of dying from the effects of medical malpractice—of drugging, serumizing and feeding, at a time when food is a poison?

Cost of Living.

FRANK P. Walsh, general chairman of the National War Labor Board, said the board has found upon investigation that a family of five cannot be supported on a wage of less than $34.80 a week.

Before the war, millions of men in the United States kept families of five or more, in comfort, on half this wage. However, a dollar is now worth only 60 cents, as compared with 1913.

In these times, it is of much importance that all should learn something about food values. Fortunately, the cheapest foods are the most wholesome. A family may starve on white bread, tea and sugar, while they may be well nourished at less cost on cornmeal, whole grain, beans, and a little raw green stuff.

Hot Fomentations.

A CORRESPONDENT sends a recipe for a compress of hops and other things, which she says is valuable in the treatment of pneumonia.

Another correspondent sends this:

"Take six to ten onions, according to size, and chop fine, put in a large spider over a hot fire; then add about the same quantity of rye meal—be sure it is meal, do not use rye flour—and vinegar enough to form a thick paste. Meanwhile stir it thoroughly, letting it simmer five or ten minutes. Then put in a rye bag, large enough to cover the lungs, and apply to the chest as hot as the patient can bear. In about ten minutes apply another, and thus continue by reheating poultices, and in a few hours the patient will be out of danger."

Several others recommend garlic, a remedy widely used in Europe.

All these applications depend, not on the contents of the poultice, but on the soothing, warm, moist heat. The rest is suggestion. The only advantage is that poultices retain the heat longer than a wet cloth. On the other hand they take much longer to prepare and you should not wait long when a person suffers severe pain.

Following method of applying hot fomentations is from Good Health:

"There is no means so safe and effective for the mother or nurse to make use of for the relief of pain as the use of moist heat in the form of a fomentation. It consists in the application to the seat of pain of cloths wrung as dry as possible out of very hot water. Heavy flannel cloths are best for the purpose. Pieces of an old wool blanket about a yard long and nearly as wide serve best for all purposes, and four such cloths, at least, should form a part of the regular emergency equipment in every household. Pieces of old flannel underwear, an old sweater, even several wool hose pieced together, have been successfully made use of as a substitute when other suitable cloths were not available.

"The cloth should always be large enough to cover considerably more skin surface than just the part to be treated.

The water for use should be boiling hot. Fold the cloth the longest way. Grasping this by the ends, dip the center into the hot water. Twist the two ends in opposite directions and then pull, holding the cloth over the water, again twisting. The hot water can in this manner be squeezed out without coming in contact with the hands. It should be wrung very dry.

"A dry flannel cloth folded in two thicknesses should be laid first next to the skin and the wet hot one applied over this, then the whole covered securely with another dry flannel cloth in order to retain the heat. As soon as the hot cloth becomes cool, usually with three to five minutes, it should be removed and a second hot one applied. Three such applications will usually suffice. If, however, the pain persists, the heat may be continued for a half hour or even longer. It is better after a fifteen or twenty minutes' application of heat, to exchange the hot cloth for a short cold application made by applying a towel or piece of cheesecloth wrung out of cold water for fifteen to twenty seconds, to restore the tone of the surface blood vessels; and then employ a second series of fomentations, if necessary.

"The concluding procedure of a fomentation should invariably be an application of cold for a few seconds to the same area.

"A fomentation should always be hot. If applied too hot, lift it up for a second or run the hand under it to let in a little air, which will have a cooling effect. The moment it becomes lukewarm it should be reheated, since heat is the one essential.

"Care must, of course, be taken not to use it so hot as to injure the skin, and in the case of children not yet able to talk, especial caution in this particular needs to be exercised.

For the relief of pain from whatever cause, a fomentation is a safe measure and will generally be successful. For stomachache, colic, bruises, sprains and other of the frequent aches and pains of childhood it is most useful."

To the above it may be added that, to avoid frequent change a hot water bottle may be placed over the outer cloth. It is most important that changes should be made quickly and deftly, and that all hot applications should be followed by a quick cold sponging.

It is a good practice for people to make a business of doing something every day for their development, that they don't want to do, and then to deny themselves every day something they want. This should not be for a day, a week, or a year, but a life work. In no other way can a man become master of himself—[Dr. J. H. Tilden.

Will We Boycott Germany.

United States fifth in the list of the nations with which it dealt most profitably. Its trade with Belgium amounted to more than $200,000,000 annually. Dealings with Italy were only a little less.

So Germany, insane, began a war on the countries that were keeping its fires burning and its machinery running and were enormously increasing its wealth. Mr. Snow, one of this government's ablest experts in foreign and domestic commerce, says that "Germany imported more than $1,000,000,000 worth of raw materials annually, receiving only 7 per cent. of the total from its present allies." Moreover, 90 per cent. of the capital Germany employed in its industries was borrowed in London.

"It is taken for granted in Berlin and Potsdam," Mr. Snow said further, "that the business sagacity of the German merchants will enable them to succeed in obtaining sufficient quantities of raw materials for their industries after the war is over."

And Lord Robert Cecil, British Minister of Blockade, voiced the warning that it was "essential for us to forestall the aggressive efforts of the Central Powers to use their money to snatch on the morning after the war the raw materials needed for the reconstruction of the people in the western and eastern theaters of war whom they have themselves despoiled."

Germany cannot do business outside of its borders unless it has raw materials. Can it rebuild Belgium and restore Northern France if it is not permitted to obtain such materials?

And, given raw materials, will Germany be enabled to sell its manufactured goods to the Americans, the British, the French, the Italians, the Belgians and the other associated peoples of the world? Treaties may grant Germany the necessary license. But, to repeat the inquiry, can treaties bind individuals? Can they bind the man or the woman at the counter or the man behind the counter?

"We know," says Mr. Snow, and he has studied the Teutons on their own ground, "that Germany has come out of this war with vast losses. She has lost in trade prestige—good will—in all parts of the world. She has saddled herself with losses of capital and men. Her stocks of raw materials and finished products are depleted. Her merchant marine cannot be restored for a long time.

"Now that the war is over, however, there is still located advantageously in the center of Western Europe a great and populous nation, through which will continue to pass many of the most important routes to trade. Germany is still going to have her great natural wealth of coal, iron, potash, lead, zinc and other less important minerals.

"Further, Germany is going to have as before a population of hard workers, showing remarkable attitude and capacity for agriculture, industry, trade, shipping, engineering and finance.

"This will continue to be the same country that in little more than a generation, with its comparatively poor soil—one-tenth unproductive, one-fourth forested and only about one-half under cultivation—was able to produce foodstuffs sufficient for the maintenance of a surprisingly large proportion of its own population, while rising to the position of the greatest sugar-making nation in the world and the foremost manufacturing nation of continental Europe. In the meantime Germany extended her trade,

BY ELOISE LOPEZ.

BABYLON was settled by retired farmers, whose children put swagger into the life of the ancients, and taught the tribes along the Euphrates how to "step."

The girls used lip sticks and rouge and dyes for the eyes, carried vanity bags on their arms, and interviewed a group of perfume bottles when preparing for a gala day.

The men were dandies to their finger tips, having their nails manicured regularly. They introduced the walking stick as an ornament of elegance, sending their men down into Persia to get a likely bit of timber from which a cane could be reduced. And when they wanted a new dog to attend them in their promenades, they dispatched a specialist to India to select one for them. The fact that the puppy that left India was a thoughtful, middle-aged dog when it reached its Babylonian owner was of no concern.

The plains around Babylon were the Kansas, Nebraska and Dakotas of their age, producing such abundant crops of wheat and other cereals that the owners became so wealthy they could command the resources of all lands. Truly it was the golden age of the farmer there. Babylon started with a bread box and ended with a jewel chest and a wine cellar.

Time and money became plentiful at the same time, in the way they have, and Babylonians started a hotel, originated a cabaret and organized the first "jazz band" some drums and a lute. The first landlady was a slave girl who put five extra beds in her house during the sixth year of the reign of Cambyses. Before that, visitors had been dependent on friends or acquaintances for shelter, or had slept in the street.

The cabaret first appeared at a splendid banquet given by one of the young bloods, when dancing, singing and vaudeville turns diverted the guests from the interminable service of foods. No good banquet in those days lasted less than three weeks, and a really swell affair ran into months. Oftentimes the guests arrived for the feast with black, glossy locks, and left slightly gray and worn. Several changes of costume, were of course necessary. And several wigs also, for a person without several wigs and switches of hair in his wardrobe was a yokel.

A God Had to Make Good There to Prosper.

RELIGION was the dominating theme of all lives in Babylon, affecting the most minute social and political affairs. The progress of the gods to popular favor was much like that of the district politician of today. First a god became popular in its own little district where it had been created. If affairs in that community prospered, more districts accepted the god, until, if the reigns met with no calamity, a temple was built in the heart of Babylon and the god became an object of general worship.

But if some restless citizen of Babylon set up a new god in some suburb, and misfortune attended the affairs of the neighborhood, the province of the deity was never extended, and finally he was cast aside, while his former followers went to the temple of some more successful idol. Marduk was the most successful of all gods, starting in a community of shanties, and advancing in popularity until all Babylon came to pay reverence.

The temples were the most extravagant expressions of the architects' and builders' genius. Before the corner stone or corner brick rather—for there were no stones in Babylon and pebbles were treasured almost like jewels—was laid, the ground was consecrated by being strewn with honey and perfumes.

One of the most popular temples was that of Ishtar, the goddess of fertility, a correct reproduction of which appears in D. W. Griffith's great film production "Intolerance." She is presented as a gigantic figure holding a human being nine feet tall, to one of her breasts. Crowds of temple girls attended the altars, devoting their lives to the service and never marrying. Oftentimes they appeased the maternal instinct by buying a child from some mother with a too abundant family.

The reputation of these priestesses was not above reproach according to modern standards of social judgment, but it was one of the precepts of the worship to exercise certain functions, and because of its intimate relation to the worship, the high priests addressed themselves to the virgins, who later were given in marriage without the least reproach clinging to their delicate devotions.

Each woman was required once in her life to visit the shrine of Beltis in the grove of Mylitta. Her mother took her to the grove where she sat beneath a tree until a passing man was attracted to her. His introduction was the flipping of a silver coin which she treasured ever after as a most precious souvenir. Unattractive women were sometimes forced to remain in the grove several years before their quest was fulfilled. This custom was enforced by law, and was in no way derogatory to the women's characters.

The Women of Babylon … the Original Suffragettes.

AND the women of Babylon had the highest standing of any time in the world's history, being permitted to make contracts alone, vote and occupy public offices, even presiding as judges. They were the original suffragettes.

The marriage ceremonies were part civil and part religious as now, and no marriage was legally valid without a contract. The bride had a dowry. Parents could not sell their daughters, but if the parents were dead, a brother could sell his sister. The ceremony was preceded by the arrival of the bride with great formality, bearing her weaving, her slaves and her money.

Those who officiated first placed their hands and feet against the hands and feet of the groom, then against those of the bride, and her neck was next placed beside his. He was made to repeat: "Silver and gold fill thy lap. Thou art my wife; I am thy husband. Like the fruits of the orchard will I give thee offspring." Next came the ceremony of binding the sandals on the feet of the couple, and of handing them the string with which to tie their shoes, and finally the purse containing silver and gold.

For young women who lagged along the highway of romance, a marriage market was established. Dyed, rouged and perfumed, the helpless and oftentimes unwilling applicants for matrimony were presented on a platform, while a glib and persuasive auctioneer presented their good points to prospective husbands. Defects were cannily concealed by the auctioneer, and luxurious praise applied to the young lady.

A Tactful Auctioneer Married Off the Laggards.

THE funds from the auction went into a common coffer, and when the girl's appearance was such it needed some inducement to occupy the domestic plans of a man, the money received from the better looking girls was given as a premium with the less attractive ones. The auctioneer's success and pay was registered by how much he could get for the handsome ones and how little he had to give with these less comely.

Babylon had its financial aristocrats in the Murashu family, the Morgans of that day. They controlled a chain of banks, and did an international exchange business, owned vast tracts of lands which they rented, and had to be reckoned with whenever a war was planned, although a good war cost but very little to stage.

Business was transacted by mail, with a postal system created by the needs of the time, and after which the present one is modelled. Letters were written on clay tablets, and then sealed in cotton envelopes. Whoever read another person's mail had an immediate engagement with the hangman.

Clay was the common material for building, because of the absence of stone. All buildings were made of bricks, glazed ones serving for the exteriors. When a large building was started, cylinders bearing the legend of the undertaking were sealed in the corner block, and duplicates concealed in other parts of the building.

If an architect designed a house that collapsed and killed the owner, the architect was killed as compensation. If the owner's son or daughter was killed, the architect's son or daughter paid the penalty, and if he had no corresponding offspring, a distant relative would serve.

No Sizing up the Patient's Pocketbook Here.

THE fees of doctors were prescribed by law. The code of Hammurapi, the great law-maker provided: "If a doctor has operated with a bronze lancet on a man for a severe wound, and has cured him, or has removed a cataract with a bronze lancet for a gentleman and cured the eye of the gentleman, he shall receive ten shekels of silver. If the patient be the son of a freedman, the doctor shall receive five shekels."

If a woman proved faithless to her husband, he could divorce her, make her work for him as a slave, and bring a second wife to the household.

If a woman was suspected of scandal, and denied it, she had to appease the wounded feelings of her husband by plunging into the holy river. Infidelity was punishable by death, it being a favorite sentence to bind the offending couple together and drop them into the river.

The judgments of the earlier courts rested upon the ancient precept, "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." The primitive law of retaliation was followed as closely as possible in every detail.

It Would Pay to Keep up Your Swimming.

IN SOME instances when a dispute arose over property rights the accused was thrown into the river. If he drowned, the accuser seized all the property of the accused, death being a confirmation of guilt. If the accused survived, he confiscated all the property of the accuser. Shrewd disputants when wishing to accuse, selected a court where the river ran very deep and fast for the test of the accused.

The Hanging Gardens of Babylon, which the Hebrews cited as one of the seven wonders of the world, were so large and strong great trees were grown in them. The soil was irrigated, and a waterproof coating of bitumen applied to the floor of the gardens so the water would not drip through upon the revellers of Babylon who spent much of their time feasting in the gardens.

The first large bridge was built across the Euphrates within the city walls. The ferrymen struck for higher wages, and to bring them to terms, the King ordered a bridge built across the river, an engineering feat never before attempted. The architects ordered to build the bridge were informed they could either construct it, or retire to their deathbed. Brick supports were built in the river bed. By night, the platform of the bridge was withdrawn to suspend traffic.

The crystal ball of that era was a sheep's liver. The success or failure of the projected activities depended on the lines along which the blood coagulated in the liver. To Babylonians the liver was the same as the heart is to moderns, and for a young gallant to say the sight of an attractive woman agitated his liver, was the highest compliment he could pay.

Wooing, though, was largely a matter of inspection on the part of the bride-seeker, and then a remark "I'll take you." The wedding occurred a few days later.

At the time the priests betrayed Nebuchadnezzer and permitted Cyrus to enter the city, the students were learned in astrology, kept time with sun dials, and a water clock by night, fashioned rude telescopes; and the rich had perfected a system of entertainment never equalled in lavishness. But even then there was some talk of stopping the wine dinners, because of the habit of the nobles' wives disrobing and dancing with the girl entertainers, a practice which led to confusion and ill-feeling.

Copper as a Peace Asset.

The Utah Consolidated, not far away, paid dividends of $1,000,000 last year, and there are other mines close by that have paid hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The copper output of Alaska is steadily increasing. It was about 21,000,000 pounds in 1914, and more than 86,000,000 pounds in 1915. The year following it was almost 121,000,000 pounds, and now eighteen copper mines are being operated and others will begin to produce during 1919. Some of the largest of the mines are on Prince William Sound, and the most valuable of all are the Kennecott mines, reached by the Copper River Railroad, which cost something like $20,000,000 to build.

During my recent stay in Alaska the Kennecott properties were yielding more than 60,000,000 pounds of refined copper a year, and the profit must have been something like 20 cents a pound. These copper deposits are situated high up in the Coast Range Mountains. They were discovered through a great outcrop of green ore which the prospectors at first thought was a sheep pasture, but upon investigation proved to be copper ore turned green by exposure.

The discovery belonged to eleven miners, each of whom was paid $100,000 without performing a bit of development work. The property was finally developed by the Guggenheims, who spent tens of millons before the mines began to pay. The Bonanza mine with its railway cost something like $25,000,000, and up to the outbreak of the war it had paid more than $15,000,000 in dividends. It has yielded enormously since then, and there are other valuable deposits belonging to the same company near by.

The Latouche copper mine on an island in Prince William Sound was discovered by some miners through a mess of bad clams. They found the clams on the shore and were about to eat them when they discovered they contained copperas and one of the men suggested that there must be a copper deposit near by. They thereupon threw away the clams and prospected the rocks sloping down to the water, finding deposits of low-grade copper ore which have since been developed and found to pay.

New Year's.

ANOTHER New Year is upon us—Nineteenth Hundred and Nineteen. It is a hundred and one years since we had such an alliteration.

Have you ever observed how much faster time seems to fly as we grow older, apparently as a train accelerates its speed in passing out of a station? This is because our senses are not so keen as in our youth and we do not pay so much attention to passing trifles.

When I was a boy, in boarding school, in England, we would start a table of days to the holidays, and cross off a day every evening. We never thought of beginning such a table more than a month from the date. Two months would be altogether too far away, in the dim future. Now—especially if you have a note coming due—six months passes like six days of your youth.

Perhaps, if man should ever attain the apocryphal age accredited to some of the Old Testament patriarchs, he might approach the condition ascribed to the Almighty, to Whom an age is as a minute, and a minute as All Time.

Don't begin the year by making a lot of resolutions you know you will not keep. Then, when you break them, you become discouraged, and despondent, and disgusted, and plunge deeper in "sin"—such, for instance, as drinking a glass of beer, or smoking a stogie.

Suppose a mountain climber should turn back whenever he stumbled over a stone. He wouldn't soon get anywhere, would he? New Year's resolutions are like lovers' vows, or pie crust.

Barkeepers have told me that the average time New Year's recruits serve on the water wagon is ten days. Some of course endure, but they are like white swallows.

When you backslide, do not become discouraged, but grit your teeth and take a new "holt."

Emotional reforms are seldom lasting. Like religious conversions they must be founded on real conviction.

Here is a New Year's suggestion I sent a few years ago to my friends, "Don't hurry, don't worry; keep your head cool; your feet warm and your bowels open." That is practical, if not poetic.

Remember also, while you are swearing off, that there are worse "sins" than smoking, or drinking beer, or playing cards, or dancing, or attending the theater. As, for instance, selfishness, the greatest curse of the human race.

I take this opportunity of wishing all my readers a happy and prosperous New Year.

Fear.

OUR "all-is-mind" friends say that all diseases are caused by fear.

This is absurd. As I have said, fear largely contributes to disease, but no amount of confidence, or "affirmations" of things that are not, will prevent you from getting sick if you persistently abuse your body.

Nature will not work a miracle on your behalf. See that your blood is pure, then you may safely fear nothing.

It will not do for you to indulge your appetite and then expect Providence to save you from the consequences of your self-indulgence.

This is as sure as that two and two make four. All is not mind. Neither is all body. We are a wonderful mixture of both. See that your mind directs the body in the right road, and does not let the body become the master. Then you may truthfully say:

"I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul."

Nature Alone Cures.

IT IS refreshing to come across an M.D. who holds more or less rational ideas in regard to the care of the body. Few of them go so far as Hippocrates, whom they call the "Father of Medicine," when he declared that "Nature, not the physician cures." Yet there is an increasing number of thinking physicians who begin to see how far the guessing, drugging, carving and serumizing school of medicine has wandered from the truth, with the result that disease and suffering increasingly abound.

At the annual meeting of the American Public Health Association in Chicago, last month, following a two days' discussion of preventive measures against influenza and pneumonia, it was the verdict of that body that nature is the world's greatest physician. If they had said the "only physician" they would have been nearer the truth. Dr. Charles J. Hastings, president of the organization, said:

"We are nature's skilled assistants. It requires a great deal of knowledge to know how little we know. A tremendous amount of damage is done by interfering with nature, when nature would have done better if she had been let alone. After twenty-five years in practice I felt like a disciple of Shakespeare—throwing physic to the dogs.

"We have very little power over pneumonia. I am convinced that as many patients have been killed by physicians as have been cured. I did my share of killing when I was in a hospital—giving whisky, strychnine, etc. If they had been let alone they would have recovered."

Another attending physician, Dr. A. A. Goldsmith, said:

"During the last ten years I have let my patients alone."

To which doubtless he might have added that a large majority recovered.

Vivisection.

A DISPATCH from London states that vivisection experiments on living animals showed a decrease last year of 20 per cent., that is to say from 65,000 to 55,000. I am afraid that the record in the United States was different.

Vivisection not only causes excruciating pain to animals, and hardens the souls of the operators, but it is worse than useless, being harmful to human beings, because it leads to wrong methods of treatment.

If the enormous sums of money expended in this country on animal experimentation were utilized to establish places where rational methods of treatment were given, what an immense amount of good might be achieved.

Fat Cattle.

I WENT to the Liberty Fair in Los Angeles, and saw the fat cattle.

They were "in the prime of condition," I was told.

They lay there in stalls, inert on the ground, like masses of flesh, or enormous maggots. There was no life, or restiveness, or ambition in them. How different from free cattle on the range. I pitied the poor beasts.

This is what some people consider the "picture of health," in men or animals.

This is what brings prizes to babies at shows.

Queer taste. Curious conception of health. No wonder domesticated animals often get sick—and domesticated human beings.

Reckless Experimentation.

A COUPLE of weeks ago I wrote about reckless experimentation with untested serums.

The Mayor of Los Angeles sent Dr. H. F. True of the Medical Advisory Board to San Francisco, to study influenza conditions there, and methods adopted for combating the disease. On his return Dr. True said:

"Vaccines are of the most doubtful value. At the Napa asylum vaccine was used on the patients. Yet one half of them contracted the disease. As a preventive of influenza I do not believe that vaccine is of any value whatever."

Yet officious "health" officers all over the country are strongly recommending the use of various serums to combat influenza. Why? Can it possibly be that it is because the manufacture of these serums is highly profitable?

Surely, there should be a legal check placed on this reckless experimentation upon the bodies of the people.

When the people learn of the harm that has been done and is being done by the reckless experimentation with serums, they will be appalled.

In China.

MANY ignorant people regard the Chinese as "benighted heathen." Yet the Chinese had printing presses and a daily newspaper when our ancestors were running about in blue paint and skins.

Moon Kwan, an educated Chinaman, living in Los Angeles, says there was a big epidemic of influenza in the Province of Kwang Tung, of which Canton is the principal city. There were many cases, but few deaths. When asked why, he replied it was because they eat little when they are sick, and use the Chinese remedy of rubbing the skin with a silver dollar, dipped in salt water, to stir up circulation.

Of course, the rubbing with a dollar is a superstition, but it is not more of a superstition, and much less harmful, than wearing a gauze mask, to catch all the filth from the outside and retain the filth of the lungs. Rubbing to restore circulation is always good, but it should be done with the hands, the fingers dipped in a good body oil.

As I have previously said, if when people are sick they would fast, clean the bowels, and keep warm, they would practically all recover.

Quarantine.

THE health officer of Los Angeles, having failed to enforce masking—of which he did not approve—established a house quarantine on influenza and pneumonia.

Another fine method of imparting fear, and consequently increasing sickness.

How can you quarantine against the air? Perhaps you say these "bugs" only live for a few minutes after they have been expelled from their happy homes, in the throats of patients. Well, then, how about the nurses and doctors, who go in and out—the doctors, perhaps, wearing ethical pointed beards?

You may say they take "precautions." Evidently these precautions do not protect them, for many physicians have suffered from influenza and the average proportion of them have died, just like common "laymen."

By the way, how about telephones? If these germs are so dangerous, can you imagine a more effective way of spreading them? A man rushes from his home to the corner drug store, and telephones for a physician to attend his daughter, who has influenza. Another man comes in and waits until the first is through, and then applies his mouth to the mouthpiece of the telephone, breathing in the "bugs" that the party of the first part has left there.

Other instances of possible contamination might be cited, ad infinitum.

The whole quarantine business is annoying and futile as a preventive of disease, because disease is from within, not from without.

Abolish the Truss Forever
Do Away With Steel and Rubber Bands That Chafe and Pinch

You know by your own experience the truss is a mere makeshift—a false prop against a collapsing wall—and that it is undermining your health. Why, then, continue to wear it? Stuart's PLAPAO-PADS are different from the truss, being medicine applicators made self-adhesive purposely to prevent slipping and to hold the distended muscles securely in place. No straps, buckles or springs attached; no "digging in" or grinding pressure. Soft as Velvet—Flexible—Easy to Apply—Inexpensive. Continuous day and night treatment at home. No delay from work. Hundreds of people have gone before an officer qualified to acknowledge oaths, and swore that the Plapao-Pads cured their rupture—some of them most aggravated cases of long standing. It is reasonable that they should do the same for you. Give them a chance.

much as Spain, which was for a long time the world's chief copper producer. The product of Michigan is more than half as large as that of all Mexico, and Arizona and Montana have a copper output greater than that of any two foreign nations combined.

The plans of the Americans were to smelt the ore on the ground, and to equip the mines with all modern mining conveniences. They were running the mines and smelters with fuel oil brought by the company's own pipe line from Batum and carried there from the Caspian oil fields in tank cars. Just before the war opened upward of 1000

They are now mining something like 1200 feet below the surface, and pumps have to be kept going to take out the water. Some of the tunnels are 900 feet below the level of the sea. Chauncey Depew Snow—He knows all about the German tricks of trade.

WASHINGTON, Nov. — Will the buyer, now that the seas again are open, take the cutlery or crockery after he learns that it was made in Germany?

And will such wares be found on the shelves of America? Or of England, France, Italy, Belgium and the twenty-odd other nations that were locked in battle with the Huns, Turks and miscellaneous barbarians?

The spirit in the hall of peace will be stern, no doubt, but it will not be malignant and the document written therein will sound fair in history. There is neither virtue nor dignity in vengeance that is national; much less in vengeance that is international.

But while governments may be pledged by the men at the treaty table—wise men, their thoughts on today and on tomorrow—can they, though honored and relied upon, pledge the individual? Can they pledge the Belgian woman to buy from the Prussian hand that lit the fire that consumed her home?

Can they in writing, be it ever so lofty and official, bind the French husband who saw his wife slain by the soldiers of Germany, to purchase anything grown or manufactured in that vile and abominable country?

Will Americans and Britons, women of heart and men of courage, forget the sacrificial graves in Flanders, Champagne and Picardy? Will Italy find comfort for its sorrows in coarse Teutonic bargaining?

"When peace has opened a free road for German work both at home and overseas," President Havenstein of the Imperial Bank said recently, "and when the German merchant shall again be able to wrestle in open competition with other nations in the world market, nothing can permanently paralyze German work, which is inimitable."

The Workers Will be the Men Who Tortured.

THIS "work" will be done by those who tortured and maimed little children, robbed and destroyed the homes of thousands of poor peasant and workingmen, sank hospital ships, fired on sailors and fishermen in lifeboats, burned cities and towns in savagery and wantonness, to no military purpose whatever, and, under the white flag of surrender (sacred until defiled by the Huns,) shot down American, French and British soldiers.

"German business men," says Chauncey Depew Snow, one of the most capable and intelligent commercial experts in the world, "are facing the future with the view that in the past not a mark's worth of German good was purchased abroad for love of Germany. They assume that the trade of the future will be based as heretofore on the grounds of value and that German commerce in foreign markets can proceed as before."

Always the Teuton has misread the rest of mankind. A savage himself, under his disguise of philosophy and materialistic efficiency, with lager beer and sausage as his pastimes, he still believes, in the face of his own ruin, self-wrought, that other men are gluttonous, untruthful and mercenary. And, moreover, forgetful.

"The merchants and shippers of Hamburg and Bremen," declares their newspaper organ, "sincerely wish and believe that 'the war after the war' will be stopped as soon as possible and honest competition resumed all along the line in old-time unrestricted fashion."

Although it has not said so, Washington now thinks that all Germans are pretty much alike. The business men of the United States, in turn, have reached the same state of mind but with some regret. "We," meaning the financiers, merchants and manufacturers, "attempted to stop the war but failed," said Arthur von Gwinner, director of the Deutsche Bank, to one of the chief citizens of Boston, who told the writer of the remark made by the Berlin banker.

Men of business have profound respect for their kind and class. They know their own aspirations, practices and habits of thought. The brotherhood and its principles, they supposed, were practically the same in America and the greater part of Europe. And, possibly, they are, once the Teutons are deducted from the rest.

The Banker Who Lied and Cheated His Friends.

THE pretended disavowal of Von Gwinner was the cause, indirectly, of the boycotting action taken by the chambers of commerce and boards of trade in this country. Von Gwinner's sincerity was not questioned by anybody who had heard of his sorrow, as confessed by his own lips. He spoke the truth, undoubtedly, said business America. One distinguished fraternity brother would neither cheat nor lie to another.

It was not known at the time that Emperor William had bribed the bankers, merchants, manufacturers and land-owners of Germany with grand promises of fabulous personal profits to be gained by the war then brewing. Acres by the million, outside of the empire, would be distributed. Property seized in Great Britain would be parceled among the faithful—provided they were liberal in the taking of German war loans. America was to be levied on until it groaned.

The programme of loot later found its way among the troops, horse and foot, and they stole feather beds and spoons, cook stoves and watches, tables and crockery on their marches through Belgium and France. Troops, by the way, who, as workmen in peace, are to conquer, as Herr Havenstein promises, with their "inimitable" goods.

If the business men of Germany had been opposed to war, argued the organized business men of the United States, they would, it seemed certain, under a threat of a boycott against their potash, toys, dyes, china, cutlery, cottons and so on, try to end the war and save themselves from irreparable loss. Such was the fabric of American business philosophy.

The boycotting resolution was adopted by an almost unanimous vote. It swept the country from shore to shore and from boundary to boundary. A mighty weapon, forged in the arsenal of hope, it was to shorten the war and save American money and blood. As well might it have been made of wood and painted red. It gleamed in the air for a moment but never struck.

Is it unreasonable to think that when the merchants and manufacturers of Hamburg, Chemnitz and Nuremberg heard of it they clinked their earthen mugs together and laughed? About that time Dr. Bernhard Dernburg was declaring with respect to Germany's future supply of raw materials, that cotton, copper and so on "must not only be demanded, but it must be possible, if need be, to extort them by force."

Germany was to win the war. The American boycott had no more terror than a tin sword; and the solemn determination of 20,000 British seamen to sail no ships into or out of German ports for a period of five years after the war was equally as impotent to change the minds of the men to whom Emperor William had promised the riches of many lands, more particularly the riches of Great Britain and the United States.

Business America's revelation worked for the nation's good. Diplomacy, it found, was not its forte. Arms were to be manufactured, ships were to be built, bonds were to be bought, taxes were to be paid. Herein business America has since wrought with an energy and a talent that have astonished the world.

It may be printing a secret that should be kept, but the writer sees no harm in saying that President Wilson was never impressed by the boycotting movement. Possibly he was aware of the greed and servility of Germany's men of business. Or he may have felt that America's only weapons were its army and navy, its rifles and cannon aimed at the vitals of the Huns.

The boycott and its failure has not only worked for the good of the United States but it has shown the manufacturing, financial and mercantile classes of the country that Germany is unlike any other nation, in that to no influential element of its population can a humane or an ethical appeal be made successfully.

By their resolution, American business men meant to give the business men of Germany a greatly desired opportunity, with a concrete illustration, to argue down the war to their Emperor and the military leaders of Prussia. No opportunity was desired, however. Not when land was to be confiscated and distributed and when railroads, mines and factories were to be stolen and apportioned.

The same business men are doing business in Germany. They will be doing business there, and elsewhere if they can, in the days that follow the fall of Berlin. Political Washington and business America thoroughly understand their character and their methods.

Will Make Germany Pay For Orgy of Destruction.

IF PLANS work out as intended, Germany will pay billions for its orgy of destruction. Business, logically, will bear most of the burden. The prosperity of Germany heretofore has been measured by its trade with foreign countries. It purchased raw materials and manufactured them into finished products which it sold throughout the world. Riches poured into its cities and industrial centers. Its best customer was Great Britain, to which it sold and of which it bought nearly $1,000,000,000 worth of goods yearly. France was fourth and the

REMEMBER WE ARE ALL IN THE SAME BOAT ON THE FRONT ROW

Some Good Short Stories from Everywhere.

Compiled for The Times Illustrated Magazine.

Some Family.

"UNTIL they got to know each other, and each other's language better, there used to be some funny misunderstandings between our doughboys and the poilus," said Secretary of State Lansing at a dinner recently. "For example, I received a letter from a friend of mine in which he mentioned that he guessed that the Vous family must be the largest in France for he had met so many of them. He said:

"'There are Monsieur and Madame Vous, whose first names are Avez and Parlez, which last you call Polly. Then there are the mysterious Vous twins, Taisez Vous and Mefiez Vous, who perform a patriotic service by warning the public against alien enemies.

"'Then there is Savez Vous, who wants to know if you know; Voulez Vous, who wants to know if you will; Pouvez Vous, who wants to know if you are able, and Souvenez Vous who wants to know if you remember.

"'This is only the beginning, for the Vous family is the largest in France, in fact, almost as large as the Damn family of the United States.'"

Truth is Stranger.

"BUT don't it keep you awake nights trying to think up lies about your people," asked a fair visitor of "Ham" Beall, publicity man at Universal City.

"We don't lie," retorted Ham. "In the first place, the truth is more interesting and unusual and in the second place, lies are always transparent. It reminds me of two farmers who both had reputations as being the biggest liars in town. Finally they met at the grocery store and a prize was offered for the man who told the biggest whopper. Accordingly the first started off:

"'I know a poor Nebraska farmer—'"

"'Give him the money,' cried his opponent, 'there ain't no such thing!'"

Still a Mystery.

A LONG and patient, but vain effort on the part of a khaki-clad driver to induce a mule, drawing what appeared to be a wagonload of laundry, through the gateway of a hospital "over there," afforded considerable amusement for the bluejackets who were watching the proceedings. The mule would do anything but pass through that gateway.

"Want any help?" called one of the tars as the mule-driver rested a moment.

"No," snapped the driver, "but I'd like to know how Noah ever got two of these blighters into the ark!"

Finishing Touches.

"EVERY business can be made an art," insisted Mayor Woodman at a recent Council meeting. "Why, only the other day I overheard this conversation between two street cleaners:

"'Bill certainly was a good sweeper,' said one.

"'Yes,' conceded the other reluctantly, but don't you think he was a little weak around the lamp posts?'"

She Wasn't Sure.

A PERSISTENT lady had buttonholed Gen. Crowder and insisted on talking about the war. "But we can't talk about it," insisted Crowder. "You don't know enough about military matters. In fact, begging your pardon, you remind me of a young lady who came to me one day and said:

"'Oh general, just think, my brother enlisted two months ago, and now he's a field marshal!'

"'A field marshal in two months, from a private? It can't be done,' I exclaimed.

"'Did I say field marshal,' murmured the girl. 'Well, perhaps it was court-martial. I know it was one or the other.'"

Preparedness.

THEY had brought in an alleged slacker and Chief Butler was questioning him. "Have you got your card," demanded Butler.

The suspect pointed to his suit case. "A whole case of them," he retorted. "Which do you want to see—draft, registration, meat, sugar, calling, milk, playing, or postal card?"

Bargain in Butchery.

"THE Germans are ghastly people," said Representative Carter Glass of Virginia. "The Kaiser told them that if they started the greatest war of the world they'd be the greatest people on earth, and the German people took the madman's word for it.

"They remind me of the thin anemic woman whose friend accosted her on the street and said:

"'Why Mary, how pale and thin you look. I thought you were going south for your health!'

"'I was,' said Mary, 'but my doctor has offered me such a lovely bargain in operations—a major operation for $1000—and of course I can't resist that!'"

Miles of It.

"A MINNEAPOLIS laundress, a negro woman, and loyal supporter of the Red Cross, was among the thousands who witnessed the Red Cross parade there, in which 15,000 women participated. In telling a Red Cross worker how she liked it, she said:

"Lawdy, missus, it suttinly was a grand sight. Nevah in mah whole life did I see so much washin' at one time!"

A Shell Game.

NOT even the ghastliness of war can squelch the spirit of the soldier boy," remarked Senator Lodge the other day. "It was my privilege recently to attend a dinner at which a certain Sergt. Jenkins was beguiled into relating some of his experiences at the front. 'I suppose,' ventured a wide-eyed debutante, 'that you must have had some very narrow escapes.'

"'Nothing to speak of,' said Jenkins, modestly, 'but I remember one night when I felt like having a drink, so I goes down to the estaminet. I'd just got my hand on the door knob when old Fritz sent over one of his big ones and it landed right on the house.

"'And believe me, it blew the whole shebang to pieces, and left me standing there, silly like, with the door knob in me mitt.'"

Squelching Him.

ROBERT CHAMBERS tells a good one in which Rex Beach is the hero. Seems that a certain acquaintance of Beach occasionally breaks into print and causes the novelist great annoyance by bragging about it.

"One day," says Chambers, "Beach and this party met and the latter said, 'did you see my latest story in The Wonder Magazine?'

"'Yes,' said Beach, 'and a friend of mine paid it a nice little compliment.'

"'How's that,' asked the delighted pest.

"'He wanted to know if I wrote it,' retorted Beach."

• • •

To Turn Tables.

ACCORDING to Supt. Shiels, the war garden isn't universally popular. On the first day of school following the "flu" vacation, one small boy was asked how his garden was coming along.

"Not very well," he said bashfully.

"Going to have another next year?" asked the superintendent.

"No, sir," said the small boy.

Then he added:

"You see, sir, Tommy, who lives next door, kept chickens. So next year, I'm going to keep chickens, and Tommy can plant the garden."

His Excuse.

ONE of the funniest Police Court cases of the season developed the other day when a man who had been arrested for drunkenness and disturbing the peace, was called to trial.

It developed that at 1 o'clock in the morning he had been discovered apparently trying to break into a Spring-street pawnshop, but he was so noisy and so crude about it that obviously he wasn't a burglar.

"I was only trying to find out what time it was," said the prisoner, when questioned, and added "that guy had my watch!"

Worth Learning.

GEN. BIDDLE said at a London garden party:

"The doughboy in France has a lot of trouble with the French language. A soldier sat in the Tuileries Garden one day and thumbed a French phrase book discontentedly.

"'This here book,' he growled, 'don't tell you what you want to know, at all. It tells you how to say "the uncle of your mother is 65 years old;" or "the sister of your wife has bought a cow," or "the umbrella of your neighbor is in the attic," but I don't want to say nothing of that kind.'

"'What I'm after,' continued the doughboy, 'is a book that tells you how to say "Your face is familiar, ain't we met before," or "gee, them eyes!" or "little girl, you sure look out of sight in that swimmin' suit!"'"

Plain as Day.

"THE words 'I don't know,' are rapidly disappearing from the lexicon of the American boy," remarked Dr. Shiels at a recent teachers' meeting. "Only the other day I chanced on a pair of urchins gravely regarding a dentist's sign which read facetiously 'I. X. Tractem, Painless Dentist. Nitrous Oxide.'

"Said one boy, 'what does that sign "Nitrous Oxide" mean?'

"'Gosh, don't yon know nothing?' retorted the unabashed comrade, 'it's Latin for "Open All Night!"'"

War Bride.

"CUPID" SPARKS only the day before, had issued a marriage license to the young girl who now stood irresolutely before him.

"I want to cancel this," she said, when he asked what he could do for her.

"What's wrong," asked Sparks, all sympathy.

"Oh, nothing's really wrong," said the girl hastily, "but I've been thinking it over, and I've decided that I'd better put Phillip in the deferred classification."

Willing to Please.

GEORGE CREEL, head of the war publicity work, tells one on a correspondent who had gotten himself marooned in Sudan. The place got on his nerves and finally he wired to headquarters for a transfer, as follows:

"Can't stay here; am in danger of life; surrounded by lions, elephants and wolves."

To which the hard-hearted chief at headquarters wired back:

"There are no wolves in Sudan."

Next day, the desolate one replied:

"Referring to my wire of the sixteenth, cancel wolves."

Modern Tragedy.

COL. ROOSEVELT in an Oyster Bay address was attacking those couples who selfishly insist on remaining childless. "The Brewsters were such a couple," he said, "and only a day or so ago I heard two men discussing them.

"'I hear the Brewsters are going to get a divorce,' said one.

"'Is that so? And who gets the custody of the Pekingese?'"

Scarce and Valuable.

THEY were threshing it out in Judge Chesboro's court, the chauffeur on one side, and the man whose toes he had run over, on the other.

"Aw gee, judge," protested the chauffeur, "don't let him sue for $100, I ain't got nothin' but my pay. I ain't no millionaire."

"And I ain't no centipede," shouted the man whose toes had been crushed.

The Big Noise.

CHARLES M. SCHWAB said in a Hog Island address:

"If the German famine keeps on, the strikes will keep on, and the whole country will go out of existence. There's nothing like famine to cause revolution. As the Dutchman said:

"'Empty stummicks make der most noise.'"

Hard to Please.

NORMA TALMADGE, the screen star, was defending the short skirt.

"You men are never content," she declared. "We wear hobble skirts and you guy us. We wear slashed skirts and you guy us. We wear short skirts and it's the same old story."

Miss Talmadge shrugged her shapely shoulders and showed her white teeth in a laugh.

"In fact," she said, "whenever we poor girls put on something new, you men take it off."

The Wrong End.

AN IRATE man rushed into an Owl drug store the other day and demanded his money back. "You advertised 'No more colds, no more coughs, certain cure,'" he shouted, adding "and I've drunk the whole darn bottle and I've got a peach of a cold."

The clerk answered mildly "why didn't you read the label? This is a solution to put on the soles of your shoes to keep them dry."

Gone His Limit.

GEN. PERSHING has said that our negroes are great soldiers, but for all that they are the butt of innumerable jokes. One of the latest tells of a troop, which, after several days of strenuous fighting, had been compelled to make a twenty-mile hike. Just before dismissing the troop, the captain said:

"I want all the men who are too tired to take another hike to step two paces forward."

All stepped forward excepting one husky six footer.

"Well, Johnson," said the surprised officer, "are you ready for another twenty-mile hike?"

"No sah!" was the emphatic denial, "I'se too blame tired to even step dem two paces forward!"

Couldn't Change Him.

"THEY talk a lot about the changes that the war has wrought," remarked Capt. Langley, just back from France, "but not even war can change national characteristics. Shortly before I was called home, I chanced to encounter an English, Irish and Scotch soldier returning from a stroll. They had tramped about until they were tired and a kindly farmer had given them a lift for which they were duly grateful, and for which they desired to reward him.

"Let's stand him a drink," said the Englishman.

"Sure," demurred Pat, "that's against the law! Let's give him some 'baccy!"

"Hoot, ma laddies," interrupted the Scot, "don' be extravagant. Let's shake hands wi' the man and wish him good nicht."

Marriage Boom Coming.

"CUPID" SPARKS declares that the war has awakened the women folks to the value of men and that when the boys come back the marriage market will boom. Why, only the other day a woman came to my next door neighbor and said:

"Would you please let me borrow your husband for a few minutes?"

"Why, what in the world do you mean by wanting to 'borrow' him for a few minutes," said the bewildered wife.

"Well," explained the neighbor, "I want him to come over and discharge my cook."

Stepping from Under.

"WE MUSTN'T overlook the fact that Austria was against us in this war," says Senator Penrose, adding, "We are in the habit of blaming everything on Germany and if we don't watch out Austria is liable to escape just penalties. Austria reminds me of Percy Jones.

"Percy Jones likes to be called a regular fellow and quite gallant," said a mutual friend to another.

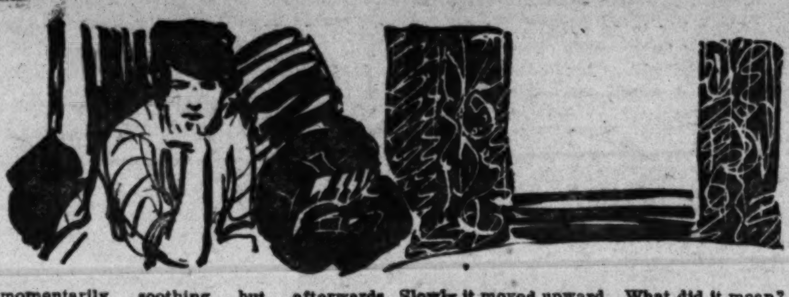
"But is he gallant," questioned the friend.

"Well, I'm not sure. He changed his mule's name from Maud to Bill so he wouldn't feel ashamed when he licked it."

MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN

A Moment of Tragedy Crushes Out Helen's Orgy of Self-Pity.

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.



"I'M getting pretty sick of it," as he shrugged into his dinner coat. "I can't go anywhere without you setting up a howl."

"Warren, that's not true," Helen met his scowling glance in the mirror. "It's only when I'm ill that I dread being left alone."

"Ill? You're always ill. If it isn't one thing it's another. If I'd stay home for all your imaginary aches—I'd be glued to the place. Here, fill this pen, will you?" emptying the pockets of the suit he had taken off.

In the library a hot tear thinned the ink as she filled the fountain pen. She must not break down—not until he was gone. When he was in this mood, tears only further exasperated him.

"Where's that hat pad?" he had come to the door, trying to smooth his silk hat with his coat sleeve.

She found the pad in his hat box where it belonged. While he stroked the silk pile to a mirrored polish, she got out his dress overcoat and saw that he had a fresh handkerchief and his good gloves.

Though she felt her continued silence increased his irritability, she could not trust her voice.

"Now, don't sit up for me," as he clamped on the glossy hat. "Go to bed early and get some sleep—so you won't be whining around tomorrow."

To follow him to the door and wait there until he entered the elevator was a never neglected ceremony. But now she stood motionless as he strode out through the hall. The bang of the door—and still she did not run after him.

Nor did she go to the window. So often had she watched him swing down the street under the streaming yellow of the corner light, that she could see him now, though she still stood dumbly in the bedroom.

Waves of wretchedness engulfed her. Throwing herself on the bed she rehearsed every word since he came home from the office. What had she said or done to bring on such a scene

She had been ill for several days, dragged and wretched with one of her prolonged sick headaches aggravated by a cold. And when he announced that he was taking Watson of Minneapolis out to dinner, she had implied that he might have chosen some other time to leave her alone.

At that he had exploded. Said he could never go anywhere without her whining complaints. He was sick of it—and of her! The last he had not actually said, but she had felt the thought. Never had he gone quite so far!

"Dinner's ready, ma'am," Nora was standing in the doorway.

"Oh, I don't want a thing!" from the muffling pillow. "I forgot to tell you—you needn't have set the table."

"But you didn't eat no lunch—you'd better have a little something."

"No, I couldn't. I'm going to try to sleep."

Sleep—if she only could! If she could go to sleep—and never wake! Then Warren would be free to come and go as he chose. Would he be sorry? Would he miss her? Or after the first wrench, would he be glad of his freedom?

She could hear Nora clearing off the table. She knew that she should try to eat, but with a sick, morbid perversity she lay there.

In a thin house gown and with nothing thrown over her, she was shiveringly chill. A silk comforter lay at the foot of the bed, but she would not draw it up. What if she did catch more cold?—that might bring on pneumonia. And pneumonia was usually fatal.

She gave herself up to an orgy of self-pity. She fairly wallowed in her misery. It was a morbid indulgence to which she sometimes yielded, but rarely to such an extent.

The trilling phone brought her to her feet and sent her stumbling through the dark into the library. Her leaping hope that it might be Warren, contrite and remorseful, was shattered by Mrs. Stevens's high-pitched voice.

"Can't you folks come over? The Reynolds are here and we're going to play auction."

"Oh, we'd love to—but Warren's dining out this evening!"

"Then you come! We'll bring you home."

Before she realized it, Helen was making a half-sobbing admission that she had a headache and a cold, and felt too wretched to go anywhere. Mrs. Stevens's effusive sympathy, at her having to be alone, was momentarily soothing but afterwards rankled.

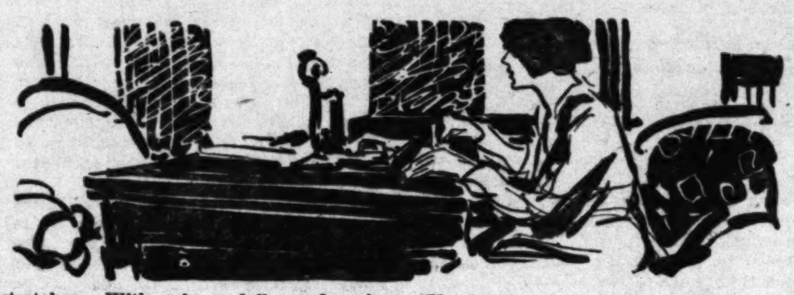
Dropping on the window-seat she gazed out over the dark looming buildings at the cloud-curdled sky. Why had she proclaimed Warren's neglect? Now Mrs. Stevens would tell Mrs. Reynolds, whom she had never liked.

Yet if he was really growing away from her, sooner or later they would all know. She thought of poor Mrs. Farnum—the contemptuous pity with which she was regarded. How quickly a woman loses caste with other women when she cannot hold her husband's love. It is a flagrant admission of failure.

But she would not be here to endure their pity. There was always some way to end it all—some swift and painless way. As though to a magnet her mind held to this morbid thought.

The library clock tolled eight, nine. Through the window casement came shrill thrusts of a piercing wind, but still she sat huddled there, hardly conscious of her physical discomfort. The clang of an ambulance in the street below! From the depths of her brooding she glanced down as the car drew up before their door.

Now they were lifting out a man on a stretcher. With only a dull wonder she watched them. Then from beneath the slipping blanket gleamed the broad shirt-front of evening clothes!



A paralyzing weakness claimed her. Her mind leapt out to the hall and down the stairs—but her limbs seemed incapable of motion. They were bringing him back to her hurt—or worse. . . .

A half-formed prayer that if only he was spared—she would make amends. She had made herself wretched over nothing—and now was fate to punish her with a crushing grief?

The telephone shrieked out—they were calling from downstairs. They wanted to break it to her gently. They did not know that she knew.

Her nerveless hands could hardly hold the receiver, and her own "Hello!" sounded strange and far away. There was no response. Frantically she shook the hook, but only a baffling buzz came over the wire.

The suspense was unendurable. She dashed out to the hall. The elevator was coming up. Tremblingly she shrank back as it neared. A sick pulsing of every nerve as she waited for the opening door and the lifted out stretcher.

The car reached her floor—and passed on. Slowly it moved upward. What did it mean? Where were they taking him?

She was running up the stairs now. She came to the twelfth floor just as the stretcher was being carried into the Carters' apartment.

"It's Mr. Carter—a paralytic stroke," whispered the elevator boy, as Helen, chalk white, stood in mute inquiry. "I rang your phone by mistake."

Down the five flights to their own apartment, she barely touched the steps. She could have screamed—shrieked with delirious joy. The thought of Mrs. Carter's grief only slightly tempered the rush of reactionary emotions.

Warren was safe! He would come back to her with his same vigorous swing. That one thought dominated all others.

Her relief demanding physical expression, she caught up Pussy Purr-mew, dozing tranquilly by the radiator. With a fierce impetuosity, she rumpled, shook, and hugged the soft furry ball until it "meewed" in protest.

"Hold on, there! That's a bit rough!"

She had not heard the door nor Warren's step through the hall.

"Here's where I come in for my share, eh?" as she flew towards him. "Only my weight's going to save me. What's up? Something's happened."

"Oh, Mr. Carter was brought home in an ambulance—a paralytic stroke—I saw him carried in! He was in evening clothes, and I—I thought it was you!"

"Jove, that's too bad! Tough on her." Then with a grin. "So that's the cause of the outburst? Glad to see me come in on my own pins, eh?"

"Oh, you don't know!" brokenly, as she clung to him. "All I suffered in those few moments—and all the resolutions I've made! Oh, dear, I'm going to be good as gold—I'm never going to complain when you have to dine out. I know you must—that it's business—"

"Pretty joyless job most of the time. Watson bored me stiff."

"Why, I thought you were going to the theater?" with a startled realization that it was only half-past nine.

"Punk lot of shows. Didn't feel much like it anyway, so I shook Watson—said I had some work."

He had wanted to come back to her! There were a dozen new and worth-while plays—yet he had come home! But very wisely she repressed her thrilled exultancy. Any such weakening he was always loath to admit.

"Look out—save the dickey!" as her ecstatic hug recklessly crushed his dress shirt. Then abruptly, "How about your dinner? Eat anything?"

Guiltily conscious of her perverse abstinence, she tried to distract his attention by rumpling his hair to a ferocious upstanding crest.

"What'd you have?" grimly persistent. "Um, I thought so. Sitting here brooding—in the dark, too, I'll bet. No wonder you got the Willies! Now, here's where I bundle you around to Hoffman's for some supper. The air'll do you good."

"Oh, I'd love it!" again unmindful of the shirt. Then with a generous impulse to concede still more, "Dear, I know you've so much to contend with at the office—I shouldn't worry you about my headaches. I'm afraid I do complain a lot. Hereafter I'm going to try—"

"Now, no post-mortems!" with his masculine aversion to all emotional dissections. "Hustle now, wrap up good and warm—pretty sharp out. Let's see, what'll we have? Some broiled sweetbreads, salad and maybe an artichoke. How does that strike you? Wasn't very hungry for dinner—guess I can do with a bit myself!"

brown. There was something vaguely proprietary in the very set of his head as he talked with her, even as Matthew looked she reached up and flecked a bit of lint from his collar.

After that Matthew hailed a taxi. Usually a street car might have sufficed, but tonight he hailed a taxi and reached his home some twenty minutes earlier than he might reasonably be expected.

Ruth was at the piano, he saw as he came up the steps. She was singing softly, and the music covered the sound of his feet on the porch. He stood for a minute staring in at the window. Ruth was in a little house dress of blue and it suddenly struck Matthew that he had not heard her sing for a long time. She seemed to have stopped since he complained that it annoyed him when he was reading. After all, she had a good voice and a little music was pleasant in the evenings.

He would ask her to play again, but even as he looked she rose from the piano and crossing over to the window, stood looking out dreamily into the garden. For the first time in many months a doubt crossed Matthew's mind.

"I wonder," he said, half to himself. "I wonder what she's thinking about."

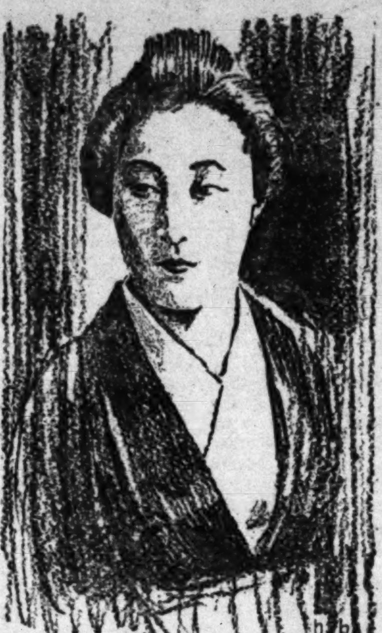
A PICTURE BRIDE OF LITTLE TOKIO.

BY AMANDA MATTHEWS CHASE.

HANAKO, the newest picture bride, sat alone at an upper window. Her husband had left her an hour before to resume business at his tea shop; for the wedding feast celebrating Hanako's arrival in Los Angeles was a matter of yesterday.



The fluttering curtains made more show of life than did the immobile little Japanese person crouched on the straight-backed chair, both tiny feet drawn up on a rung. The heliotrope tailor suit and pink silk shirt waist might have clothed an ivory carving. The dilated pupils of her flatly mounted brown eyes imaged the traffic of the street below only in a blur of hostile strangeness.

Slowly the blur cleared to light, form, color, familiar beauty, since in her homesick trance it was as if a great painted scroll had been mercifully lowered between herself and the hateful brick blocks across the street of her exile.

On this scroll the uptilting red eaves of the pagoda made a patch of vivid color against the bit of green hillside at the end of the village road. That vanished and her father warmed his thin old hands over the family brazier, the glow of it etching more clearly every line of its fine old face. Her mother, a mildly drooping figure in purple kimono, spread the bedtime quilts on the mat-covered floor.

Along the real street came a real trash wagon. A discarded New Year's bough still dangled jauntily its gilt carp and red luck verses. This cast-off bough was snatched up into her scroll. Another like it in old Japan was her wonderful first memory of all. Once more a child in her grandfather's arms, she saw the bright wonder quiver and dance above her upturned face.

Hanako's reverie took timid flight at the entrance of two women callers—gentle Shidora, plump and panting under the weight of a very fat baby; and Katsu, thin, keen-featured, active. Their tailor suits were not new and bright like Hanako's.

The roly-poly baby showed gay, however, in flowered crepe of pattern so large that a single chrysanthemum almost enveloped him.

Bobbing bows were exchanged and murmured oriental courtesies.

"Your husband adorned this room grandly for your coming," began the lively Katsu, looking from the blue roses on the wall paper to the green roses of the Brussels rug.

"And such furniture!" echoed Shidora. "That shiny bureau of the gold knobs and the pink bedstead are truly splendid."

"And the beautiful clothes!" added Katsu. "No other bride this summer has had such clothes."

Hanako's tears slipped limpidly down her soft cheeks and the child mouth was drawn into a piteous bow. Her voice seemed to come from lonely spaces far away. It suggested the wail of the Japanese koto or harp, monotonous yet sweet.

"I want nothing of this grand room nor these fine clothes. I only want to be at home again with my father and mother. If I must stay here, I shall die very soon."

The baby fussed and whimpered. Shidora rubbed his head, looking tenderly meanwhile at the picture bride, as if by intent it was Hanako's smooth-banded head she would soothe.

"We all take our turn at tears, little pigeon."

"It's the common word that a bride cries the first year," added Katsu. "After that life goes better."

"With me life can never go better—only worse," insisted the koto voice.

"I don't doubt they have laced your corsets so tight you have no breath left in you," suggested the practical Katsu. "So they did with me until I could not eat nor think nor laugh and I supposed I must exist in that American armor all the remainder of my life. But the second day I cut the strings and, with my breathing restored, I was less grieved with the United States."

Hanako's tears flowed on.

"I have no need for breathing where there is no air but that of a strange land across seas from my father and mother."

"But think what a good kind husband you have in the honorable Sabro."

Shidora rubbed the baby's head animatedly. Hanako turned slightly toward the guests, but kept the same drooping posture.

"He is not—unkind."

"Oh, Hanako!" Shidora bobbed the baby about on her knee. "I come to disclose something most great and wonderful. Naco, my husband, would be very angry with me for telling—but I want your heart to sing."

Katsu planted elbows on knees and leaned forward, but Hanako wagged her sleek head dolefully.

"Nothing could make my heart sing in this far, dreary land."

"But this is most wonderful! Hanako, your husband loves you American style!"

Shidora flung in the English phrase at the end with shrill gusto. Katsu almost sprang from her chair. Hanako's eyelids gave a weary flutter of disbelief.

"He does not deport himself according to what I have heard of American husbands. He has offered no American courtesy. He has offered no American kisses—he seems to think only of exercising me in English, so I may assist him in his tea shop."

The baby fretted and Shidora rolled him about unheedingly.

"Three times before you came, honorable Sabro brought your picture and showed it to Naco, my husband. Honorable Sabro was always looking and looking at the picture as little Taro here looks at a rice cake. Each time he confessed that he loved you American style. Each time Naco counseled and adjured him not to let you know, or your yoke would be on him like green bamboo, which dry will stiffen into iron."

"Miserable advice!" snapped Katsu.

Taro tugged at his mother's bag until she fumbled for a rice cake.

"If you continue in your husband's generous favor," purred Shidora amiably.

The picture bride unwound her little feet from the chair rung and turned squarely to her friends.

"Is there anything I could do bad enough so my husband would send me home?"

"And drag your respected parents down into their graves with shame and sorrow!" gasped Shidora.

"I suppose not—so I'll just have to die."

The koto voice had trailed off until the final words were lost among the bows and murmured compliments with which the visitors took their leave.

Again Hanako turned to the window and lost herself in homesick phantasies which were leading her toward delirium. Within the room was hateful reality—the pink iron bed rearing itself against the blue roses of the wall paper.

But outside the window hung her picture scroll, shutting away the dull brick buildings of a thousand staring windows across the street. She was looking into the home garden where fronds of feathery bamboo swayed above the snow. So cold, so cold! Involuntarily she rubbed together her little chilled hands.

The bride scarcely turned when Sabro, her husband, entered the room. He had dallied along from shop to shop, receiving the felicitations of his friends. He belonged to the sunny, easy-smiling type of Japanese youth. He was a social soul and the praises of his friends both for his bride and for his feast had fallen sweetly on his ears. As he closed the door this cheerful approbativeness lingered in his downward glance at his brown checked suit and the high lights of polish on his russet shoes.

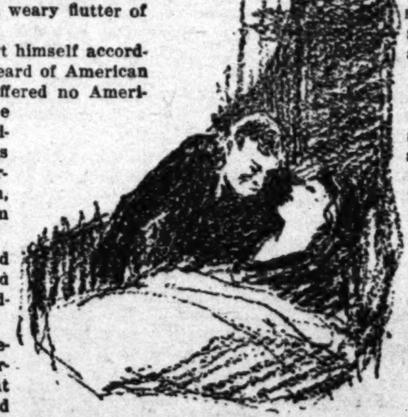
His mood faded out with the sight of the drooping figure at the window, leaving a certain sense of grievance at the discrepancy between the view of his good fortune expressed by his friends and its somber reality in the upper room.

Sabro crossed the room and edged round until he forced himself into his wife's field of vision. Then he made an impulsive movement towards her instantly checked by the baffling remoteness of her gaze. Even when looking at him she seemed scarcely aware of his presence. The philosophy of Naco fitted badly Sabro's ingenuous, mobile disposition. Besides, what was the use of dignified withdrawal when she paid even less heed to withdrawal than to approach? Hence Sabro's discontent came out in natural boyish petulance. The uncut American layer cake and the burned-out charcoal beneath the bronze tea kettle furnished him with tangible occasion.

"I see you offered no refreshments to your callers. Is it thus you conduct the hospitality of your husband's house?"

"I forgot," she murmured lifelessly, without any concentration of her blank, unseeing gaze.

Sabro left his grievance for the moment and lapsed into boyish chatter. He moved about the room as he spoke, his russet shoes sometimes clattering against the chairs.

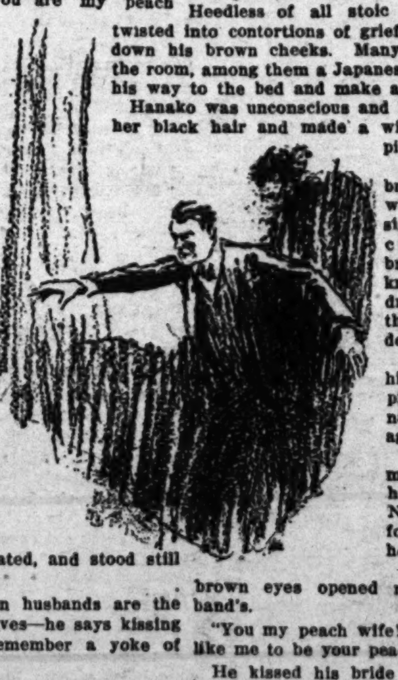


"Hanako-san, before I set myself up in my shop, I worked for an American couple, and always that American man was saying to his woman—he said—he said—"

With a shrug of comical despair, Sabro abandoned his own language for the one belonging to the folly he sought to express.

"All times he said, 'You are my peach wife. You like me to be your peach husband?' Then they kiss plenty."

Sabro delivered the American husband's words with such unction of delight that the set ivory face at the window turned toward him with eager wistfulness. The woman hitched to the front of the seat. Her eyes lost their dilated stare and the red lips their piteous line. She even swayed toward him as if drawn to something warm and comforting.



"Some American customs — one might like—" she muttered timidly.

Again Sabro started toward his wife, hesitated, and stood still with a regretful shrug.

"Naco says American husbands are the floor mats of their wives—he says kissing very silly—he says remember a yoke of green bamboo—"

The Japanese wife shrank away again, her poor little feet fumbling for the chair rungs, her spine arching itself against the chair back.

"Naco says you have no right to be thus sad," declaimed the husband, poking about among the ashes with a metal rod as he talked. "Do you find me an ogre of horror? Have I faltered in kindness? This obstinate gloom of yours—is it consistent with a wife's duty to her husband?"

At the reproof she rubbed her hands together with the motion of warming them and looked directly away from Sabro out of the window. Again she saw the tiny snow-covered home garden, but not swinging aloof on the scroll. Rather was it a scene enveloping her. She crouched shivering among the bamboos, looking for the door of her father's house. Why couldn't she see it at the left of the snow burdened ferns. Just at nightfall her mother always hung out a lighted red paper lantern. If her mother would only come with the lantern.

Sabro slipped a photograph from his pocket and compared it with the original in the stiff-backed chair. He noted miserably her present pallor and the sharpened contour of her face, so short a time since babyishly round.

"Hanako-san," he blurted, "you are so little and so sorry—my peach—"

Again she swayed slightly toward her husband, but again Naco's counsels resumed the upper hand in his mind. He put the photograph back into his pocket, tucked the ends of his wistaria-tinted tie inside his vest, and resumed in the other key of cool reason and authority.

"Many yen did I send across the water to pay for your English lessons. Now to divert your mind, we will suppose you are in my tea shop. A customer enters. Customer says: 'Show me best tea.' Now for good answer from you."

"I cannot find the door! Never before did mother forget the lantern."

"No, no! What nonsense are you speaking? You say 'Here good tea, made Japan, one-half pound 50 cents. Here more better tea, one-half pound 75 cents.'"

"My mother—is very late—with the red lantern! I cannot find—"

Sabro studied the girl uneasily, but covered his anxiety by addressing her playfully in English.

"You eat supper and you feel more better. I make you supper—I go kitchen all the same fool American style husband—I cook wife supper—"

Sabro's hand was already on the knob of the kitchen door when the lowering sun flashed redly against a window pane across the way.

"The lantern! The lantern!"

Hanako plunged from the real room into the unreal garden of her delirium. Sabro jumped for her, but she was quicker. Leaning out of the window, he had a glimpse of the crumpled little heliotrope figure before the excited passers-by, bending over her, shut her from his view.

Down the stairs dashed Sabro, pushed the others right and left, lifted his limp bride in his arms, tugged with her up the stairs and put her down on the pink iron bed. Heedless of all stoic training, his face twisted into contortions of grief while tears poured down his brown cheeks. Many followed him into the room, among them a Japanese doctor who forced his way to the bed and make a quick examination.

Hanako was unconscious and blood oozed through her black hair and made a widening blot on the pillow.

After hours of breathless watching when there were signs of approaching consciousness Sabro rose from his knees by the bed and drove everyone from the room, even the doctor.

He gently slipped his arm beneath the pillow so that Hanako's face was against his shoulder.

"That Naco!" he muttered to himself half aloud. "That Naco one Japanese fool—American man he smart all right—"

Then Hanako's brown eyes opened right into her husband's.

"You my peach wife!" he exulted. "You like me to be your peach husband?"

He kissed his bride with fervor—kissed mouth and chin and cheeks clear up to the white bandage, repeating meanwhile:

"You my peach wife! You like me to be your peach husband?"

How did Hanako, the never before kissed, know how to kiss back?

Snuggling against Sabro most adorably, the picture bride faltered in English:

"[illegible] you—my peach husband."

CELEBRITIES A LITTLE GIRL KNEW.

BY MRS. LOUISE LOW CARR.

WHEN I was a little girl I lived in Albany. About two blocks away lived Thurlow Weed, who was then one of the most famous men in the United States. He was called the "maker of Presidents" because of his great political power. He was at that time editor of the Albany Journal.

I had to pass his house to go to school and I remember how the kindly old man would come down his steps when he saw me coming. I was a fat, pudgy little girl of 7 or so. He would take from the pockets of his long coat a peach, which he would give me, always with a pleasant remark.

He was fine looking, tall and scholarly. His wife was a plain country woman, much overawed by the grandeur of their four or five servants.

I remember one day I heard her tell my mother how she hated to have "that man" (the butler) stand behind her chair; it made her nervous.

The Weeds had four children, but they lost one early in life. Later, they adopted a homeless orphan, whose father had been a cripple. She, too, died before she was 20 and was sincerely mourned.

When Mr. Weed went to England on an important government mission he took his daughter, Harriet. She sent back to her quaint little Albany dressmaker because she couldn't get suited in Paris!

Mr. Weed's daughter Mary once gave a party to which, for some reason, most of the guests failed to come. I well remember hearing her father comfort her by assuring her that the invited guests who had not come were as much indebted to her as though they had been there.

The Little Crippled Sister of Adelina Patti.

WHILE I was still a little girl my family moved to New York. As my family had been among the original settlers of Harlem, we had many relatives in that city.

At the home of my music teacher I met a dark little crippled girl with a violent Latin temper. She was Carlotta, the sister of Adelina Patti. As the result of an accident as a baby she had hip disease and was lame. She could not appear in opera because of this. I did hear her sing "La Boheme" once, however. Musical critics pronounced her voice as good, if not better than her famous sister's. Carlotta taught music and died early in life.

One event that stands out distinctly in my recollection was hearing Adelina Patti. She was only a little girl herself, in short dresses and slippers. This was her first tour. After she had sung several songs that afternoon she refused to sing any more. George Warren, the impressario of that day, proved his knowledge of little girl nature by bribing her to go on with a huge wax doll. So the future queen of song appeared in the second half of her concert dragging this great toy, nearly as large as herself.

I can only remember one song that she sang—"Star Spangled Banner." I have never heard it sung so well since.

Horace Greely and His Famous Mussed-up Collar.

AMONG the celebrities I knew in New York was Horace Greeley, editor of the New York Tribune. He was a friend of my father's and I saw him many times; but was always so overawed that I didn't remember anything Mr. Greeley said to me.

His disregard for dress was well known. In fact, he took a great pride in the carelessness of his clothes. I remember hearing my father tell how they were at a Washington hotel during a political convention. Mr. Greeley came into breakfast with one side of his collar turned up and the other side turned down. William H. Seward stepped up as he passed and adjusted the editor's collar. After he left the room, Mr. Greeley put the collar back as it had been, in an apparent state of disarray—one side up and the other down.

The Greeleys lived in the suburbs of New York, and Mrs. Greeley was said to be a wretched housekeeper. I remember hearing callers at my mother's house gossip about the Greeley's home—how, in the parlor, they found unironed clothes in one chair and clothes pins on another, and so on.

We always attended Trinity Church, and my elder sister was a member of a church guild. Another member of that guild was Mrs. John Jacob Astor, the mother of the American who turned Englishman and became Baron Astor.

When William Waldorf Astor was a little boy.

MRS. ASTOR was a southern woman, very simple and unostentatious and charming. I remember on one occasion they were making havelocks for the soldiers in the Civil War. One rather airy young lady said she did not intend to do any sewing. Whereupon, Mrs. Astor gathered up the pile of work that had been assigned to the haughty young person and took them home to sew herself.

Baron Astor was then a nice little boy, who was usually seen in black velvet suits. His mother made him give up most of his spending money during Lent as a "voluntary sacrifice" and made every effort to make of him a democratic and good citizen

The little boy was very anxious for a captured Confederate rifle. On a business trip to Washington my father succeeded in getting one for him. The letter of thanks that Willie wrote was as full of genuine gratitude, I suspect, as the one he wrote fifty years later to the King for his baronetcy.

When William Waldorf Astor's wife died, many years after this, he left an order with a New York florist that fresh violets were to be kept on her grave, winter and summer. Yellow journalism was just then beginning to flower. The papers made such a fuss over this order that Mr. Astor cancelled it. This outrageous intrusion of his privacy was one of the reasons why he renounced his American citizenship and became an Englishman.

During the Civil War John Jacob Astor was made a staff officer, and as such wore a sash. Soon after he got his commission a change was made in the uniform necessitating a new sash. I recall hearing Mrs. Astor grumble that she had to pay $14 for a new sash when he already had a perfectly good one.

The Great Editor, James Gordon Bennett, the Elder.

ONE event rich in results for me was the wedding of a Miss Crane, who was married at the then almost unheard-of age of 40. Among the guests was James Gordon Bennett, editor of the New York Herald; his wife was a sister of Miss Crane's. The acquaintance made that evening with Mr. Bennett and his wife lasted as long as I lived in New York.

The Bennetts entertained many of the great celebrities of the day, and I was often invited. Mr. Bennett himself was a Scotchman, with a decided burr in his speech and a defect in one eye. He was a pleasant man, but with no great geniality of manner. One of his hobbies was the coming downfall of the American republic. He used to enjoy teasing his young lady guests who at that time were on fire with enthusiasm for the cause of the North in the Civil War. He used to tell them that it didn't make much difference whether the country fell then or a few years later, as it would eventually go the way of Greece and Rome.

Mrs. Bennett, with her young son, James Gordon Bennett, Jr., who died recently in Paris, lived abroad most of the time. She always astonished the natives with her clothes whenever she came home. One gown stands out in my recollection especially as a masterpiece—a white silk with double skirt trimmed with three-inch white chenille frieze much after the present fashion.

At the Bennett's house I met Mme Careno, a New Orleans girl who later became a noted pianist; also Appy, the most celebrated violinist of his time.

Among my schoolmates was a Miss McElroy. Later, I attended her marriage to a young New York lawyer named Arthur, whom his friends considered rather snobbish. He was at that time very aristocratic, very particular in his dress and very much in love with his bride. He was considered to be an exceedingly promising young man, but not one suspected that the dapper young groom would one day be President Arthur.

One of the thrills of my girlhood was when Gen. Anderson, the hero of Fort Sumter, came home after the surrender. He came to Trinity Church one Sunday morning. The church was crowded and the general was a decided rival to Dr. Vinton, the rector, for the attention of the congregation.

One of the rewards which the general demanded that day was the privilege of kissing the young girls of the church. None of us was averse, I remember. Hobson, you see, had a good example.

Abe Lincoln and Walt Whitman, the Famous Poet.

AS A VERY little girl in New York, I met Abraham Lincoln, who was a guest at a house where my parents were being entertained. To tell the truth, I don't remember much about him. That was before he became President. He didn't pay any attention to me and I returned the compliment. I was more interested in a game of dolls that was going on in the nursery.

But, in later days, I remember greeting Henry J. Raymond, editor of the New York Times; Walt Whitman, the poet, and Greenlow, the perfector of the sewing machine.

Whitman was an eccentric-looking man who aped the appearance of the stage poet. His clothes didn't half fit and he was proud to be considered the king of the Bohemians. I remember, one day, that he had read in a newspaper a transposed word. The writer intended to say "the masses," but the careless printer made him say "them asses" by moving over a letter. All that evening Walt Whitman went around talking about "them asses" when he wished to refer to the public. He was much sought after socially, but died in poverty.

One of New York's great days was when they completed the first Atlantic cable. There was a great procession down Broadway. My father's office had a splendid window overlooking the parade and his friends dropped in. Among the window guests was a genial, red-faced, thick-necked Irishman named Tweed. He afterward became notorious as "Boss" Tweed of Tammany Hall. He had the peculiar chuckle of a stage villain. He liked my father, and when I was married sent me as a wedding present the champagne for the wedding supper.

The Piquant Adventure.

"Shall we go to the diner?" he said, with studied indifference.

"Yes," she admitted. "I'm fearfully hungry."

Once in the car, tete-a-tete at a narrow table, he regarded her approvingly and passed her the card. But she shook her head.

"Choose for me!" she begged. "I'm tired of knowing what I'm going to have for dinner. I want to be surprised."

Matthew made a careful selection. He was a fastidious soul and loved the balance of a well planned meal. Ruth was wont to say:

"Just some roast beef, rare, and no dessert, dear," and it hurt his idea of the nicety of things. Now he had carte blanche and he chose a meal which was, in its way, a masterpiece.

The girl appreciated it. He could tell by the light in her eyes as each course appeared. Even the waiter seemed to sense something unusual in the pair, and served them with silent dexterity.

Almost before they realized it was 8 o'clock and the train was passing through the suburbs of town. Matthew leaned over the table, a sort of madness possessing him.

"I may see you again?" he begged, and she shook her head.

"It would hardly do, I'm afraid."

"But I can't let you go like this!"

The girl turned away and he caught a strained, worried look in her eyes.

"There are reasons," she told him. "Reasons why—no—really—"

It suddenly came to Matthew that the one bright spot in the general dullness about him was slipping from his grasp and he threw all caution to the winds.

"Please!" he begged. "I must see you again. We can't part like this!"

The girl regarded him intensely for an instant, then:

"I will go put on my hat," she told him. "Wait for me in the observation car."

She rose gracefully and disappeared through the end of the diner, throwing him a quizzical little smile as she left, and Matthew paid the waiter and sought the observation car. Travel was light and the back platform was deserted, so he chose a chair in the semi-darkness and sat watching the landscape through the smoke of his cigar.

The scene about him began to be familiar, and suddenly, out of the skies, sanity descended upon him. He realized that he, Matthew Sanders, attorney at law and quasi-respectable husband and father, was sitting upon the rear of an observation car waiting for an unknown woman with the intention of making some arrangement to meet her again.

What would Ruth say? He shuddered at the thought. He was afflicted with a sort of terror and cast about for some means of escape, but it was too late. There was a little rustle of skirts and the girl was beside him.

She had on the jaunty little hat and a pair of swagger gloves, but even in the half light he could see that she did not look jaunty. She seemed a trifle frightened, and more than a trifle embarrassed.

"Look here," she began breathlessly, "I—I've something I want to tell you."

"Yes," said Matthew formally. She had suddenly become strange to him, and very far away.

"I wasn't going to come back," went on the girl. "I had intended to slip off the train without seeing you, to leave things as they were, but I made up my mind, I thought I owed it to you—"

"Yes?" said Matthew still politely. Inwardly he was raging. Why, oh, why, hadn't she kept to her first intention? It was obviously the only pretty ending for their little adventure.

"You see," went on the girl, her cheeks flushing. "You said you couldn't let me go, and I was afraid—it didn't seem fair not to tell you that—that, I'm married." She slipped off one glove and showed him her hand, a broad gold band on the third finger.

"I—I took it off in the other car because I wanted to—to see whether you'd speak to me."

Matthew maintained a discreet silence. As a matter of fact there seemed to be nothing he could say. Inwardly he was trying, unsuccessfully, to picture Ruth talking to a perfect stranger.

The girl glanced at him and went on hurriedly.

"I don't suppose you'll understand, but I've got to tell you so that you won't think too badly of me. I suppose I was mentally unbalanced when I let you speak to me, but you see, you looked like a gentleman, and I—I've been married for five years. I couldn't help wonder whether I was still—still attractive.

"Of course I adore Tom," she added loyally. "He's just the kind of a man I like, but I—oh, I don't suppose you'll understand, but get so tired sometimes of knowing just what he's going to say next that I could scream. He's a lawyer, you know, and he's always talking politics, and he's got a hobby of collecting Japanese prints that makes me wild." She stopped and looked at him hopelessly. "Of course you don't see what I mean, you wouldn't, not being married yourself, and Tom would have a fit if he knew I felt this way. I just sit at the breakfast table and try to be polite and look neat and all that, but sometimes I feel as though I—I'd throw the coffee pot at him. he's so sane, and sort of solid."

They were drawing into the station and she stood up suddenly.

"I've no right to talk like this," she said. "And I don't know what you'll think of me, but I wanted to give you a word of warning. Some day you'll get married I suppose, and you'll sit and read the paper in the morning and think your wife is content with everything. Well, she won't be. Like enough she'll be thinking things that would horrify you. She'll want a bit of excitement now and then, and sometimes she'll probably break out just the way I have." She leaned over and pressed Matthew's hand.

"Good-bye, and thank you for the spree!" and she was gone.

Matthew sat for an instant, looking out into the noise and glare of the station with unseeing eyes, then he rose and stepped from the train in time to glimpse his lady of the green suit, leaving with a tall man in
